INTRODUCTION.

If there ever is an appropriate time for the publication of such a volume as this, it is the year 1916, which marks the 100th anniversary of Indiana’s admission to the Union and it is hoped that this volume will, in a sense, be recognized as Indiana Methodism’s contribution to the historical literature of the centennial year. This book has been endorsed by the Indiana Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and to a certain degree they have made its publication possible, and for this reason I wish to express my gratitude to them, and especially to their Centennial Committees, for their encouragement, in its preparation.

The Minutes of the old Indiana Conference, have never been published, and since they cover the important years, from 1832 to 1844, the years in which Indiana Asbury University was founded, and also the years in which Matthew Simpson and Edward R. Ames were active in its councils, it was thought that the centennial year was an appropriate time to give these Minutes to the Methodists of Indiana. Accordingly the second, and largest part of this volume is devoted to these Minutes. They have been edited with notes, which it is hoped will explain all things necessary for their intelligent reading by an Indiana Methodist.

In editing the Minutes, I have been assisted by six of my students, at DePauw University, who constituted a Seminar in Early Indiana Methodist History, during the winter of 1915-1916. These students are E. J. Wickersham, Charles A. Kuttler, Fred D. Bacon, Miss Gladys Light, Roy C. Lockwood, and J. N. Simmons. Miss Ruth Price, a graduate student in the Depart-

THE PLANTING OF METHODISM IN INDIANA.

A STUDY of the genesis of Methodism in Indiana must begin with the coming of the first settlers, and the settlement of Indiana did not in any real sense begin until after the close of the Indian wars, which were terminated by General Anthony Wayne in his successful campaign of 1794. At the battle of Fallen Timbers, fought August 20, 1794, the Miami Indian Confederacy received its death blow, and the treaty of Greenville, signed the next year, opened up half of Ohio and a narrow strip of triangular shape in the southeast corner of what is now Indiana, to settlement.1 This territory however was not the first to be settled in Indiana, for the old French town of Vincennes had been in existence since the early years of the eighteenth century, and besides that Virginia had granted George Rogers Clark and his men, who had taken part in his campaign against Vincennes during the Revolution, 150,000 acres of land on the Ohio River, and this grant had been confirmed by the United States in 1784 after the territory north of the Ohio had been ceded by Virginia. THE PLANTING OF METHODISM IN INDIANA.

A STUDY of the genesis of Methodism in Indiana must begin with the coming of the first settlers, and the settlement of Indiana did not in any real sense begin until after the close of the Indian wars, which were terminated by General Anthony Wayne in his successful campaign of 1794. At the battle of Fallen Timbers, fought August 20, 1794, the Miami Indian Confederacy received its death blow, and the treaty of Greenville, signed the next year, opened up half of Ohio and a narrow strip of triangular shape in the southeast corner of what is now Indiana, to settlement.\(^1\) This territory however was not the first to be settled in Indiana, for the old French town of Vincennes had been in existence since the early years of the eighteenth century, and besides that Virginia had granted George Rogers Clark and his men, who had taken part in his campaign against Vincennes during the Revolution, 150,000 acres of land on the Ohio River, and this grant had been confirmed by the United States in 1784 after the territory north of the Ohio had been ceded by Virginia. With the close of the Indian wars settlers began to move into these grants, and the census of 1800 shows that there was a population in what is now Indiana of nearly three thousand. Vincennes and vicinity had 1,538, while Clark’s grant had 919. 2 Most of these first settlers came from across the Ohio river, from Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia and North Carolina, and a considerable number of them had been members of Methodist classes in the older states, though the Methodist was not the only denomination 3 represented among these first settlers, but Baptists, Presbyterians and Quakers were also numerous. Speaking of the migration of settlers after the Wayne campaign, into Ohio and Indiana, and its effect upon Methodist societies in Kentucky and other places within the western country, one of the pioneer preachers writes: "The Indian wars having terminated, the people began to scatter in every direction. New settlements were formed, and Ohio and Indiana began to settle rapidly, and the societies, many of them were broken up, and we had not preachers sufficient to follow the tide of emigration to their new settlements"; 4 and as a result of this situation there was a decrease of members in the Western conference from 1795 to 1801. 5

Previous to 1800 the Methodist conference in the western country was called the Kentucky conference, but in this year the name was changed to the Western conference and it so remained until 1812 when it was divided into the Ohio and the Tennessee conferences. 6

The Methodists were not the most numerous religious body among the early settlers in Indiana. It is probable that they were less numerous than either the Baptist or the New Lights.

5 In 1797 there were 1,170 white members and 57 colored reported for the Kentucky District. In 1799 the membership had decreased to 1,672 white, though there was a gain of eight colored. General Minutes, Vol. I, 74, 86.

6 The General Conference of 1796, divided the Methodist Episcopal church into six conferences, among them being the "Western Conference" [Sherman, "History of the Discipline," 319].
In 1800 the Kentucky district contained nine circuits embracing Kentucky, and the settled parts of what is now Ohio and a part of Tennessee. These circuits were manned by fourteen preachers and one Presiding Elder, the redoubtable William McKendree. The names of the circuits in this district were, the Scioto and Miami, in the Ohio country, the Hinkstone and Lexington, Danville, Salt River and Shelby, Cumberland, Green River, Holston and Russell, wholly in Kentucky, and the New River circuit, part in Kentucky and part in Tennessee. None of these circuits as yet extended into Indiana, and there were no official Methodist societies in Indiana territory at this early date, but there was undoubtedly Methodist preaching conducted by local preachers, who had come into Indiana among the first settlers, previous to any officially organized society. I have named the circuits of the Kentucky district because it was from this district that Indiana Methodism sprang. The Kentucky circuit, which was the first circuit to include any Indiana territory, was the Salt River and Shelby.

In the year 1800 there was a great revival begun, which spread all over the western country, resulting in more than doubling the membership of the Western conference, and also greatly increasing the number of both local and traveling preachers. This remarkable revival made its appearance in Kentucky in the spring of 1801, at a Quarterly meeting held on the Hinkstone circuit. This meeting lasted from Friday until Monday morning, and preaching and exhortation was almost continuous during that time. One of the preachers at that meeting has told us that there "was a great trembling among the dry bones. Great crowds fell to the ground and cried for mercy, old and young." The next week another meeting was conducted on the Lexington circuit, in which "every local preacher and exhorter was employed, holding small meetings at various places on the circuit, and on Sunday morning all the people came together for a great meeting, and as they came they could be heard, singing and shouting on the road." With this beginning the work and enthusiasm spread into all the circuits of the Western conference, and Methodist work was also extended into many of the new settlements.

The first reliable record of Methodist preaching in Indiana was in 1801 at a settlement called Springville, which was located in Clark's grant. Two local preachers, Samuel Parker and Edward Talbott, crossed the Ohio river and conducted a two days' meeting. This was evidently a part of the great revival movement which was then under way in the western country.

To William McKendree, the Presiding Elder of the Kentucky district, belongs the honor of establishing the first official Methodist class ever formed in Indiana. In the summer of 1802 Andrew Mitchell took William McKendree across the Ohio river in a canoe, and on this trip two classes were formed, in what is now Clark county, one at the town of Charlestown, the present county seat, and the other at a place called New Chapple. In the spring of 1803 Benjamin Lakin, then traveling the Salt River circuit in Kentucky, crossed the river and preached in the woods near the present town of Charlestown, as soon as the weather permitted, and made arrangements to include that neighborhood, and also the Robertson neighborhood, which was five miles north of Charlestown, among his regular preaching places, and these places remained a part of this Kentucky circuit until the organization of the Silver Creek circuit several years later. At the session of the Western conference, in 1805, Peter Cartwright was appointed as junior preacher with Benjamin Lakin, on the Salt River and Shelby circuit, and he states in his Autobiography that “Brother Benjamin Lakin and myself crossed the Ohio river and preached at Brother Robertson’s and Prather’s. In this grant we had two classes and splendid revivals of religion.”

While Methodist preaching was being introduced into Clark’s grant in the manner above described, others were introducing Methodist preaching in other sections of the new territory. The narrow strip of territory which had been opened to settlement after the Wayne campaign, in the southeast section, had become quite densely populated by 1805; especially was this true of the country along the Whitewater river. In 1805 two settlements had been formed on the east branch of the Whitewater, one a little south of the present city of Richmond, which was called the Kentucky settlement, because most of the families had come from Kentucky; the other settlement was above the present town of Brookville, and was called the Carolina settlement, because most of the families there had come from South Carolina. Among the settlers in the latter settlement were several Methodists, including James Cole, Benjamin McCarty, who had been an exhorter or local preacher in Tennessee, and Enoch Smith and his pious wife. These persons met together with some others and drew up a petition to John Sale, who was the Presiding Elder of the Ohio district, asking that a regular traveling preacher be sent them. In response to this petition in March, 1806, John Sale sent Joseph Oglesby to form a new circuit west of the Great Miami.

We are fortunate in having from Oglesby himself a description of the formation of this new circuit, which became known as the Whitewater circuit. He began his labors at the home of Moses Crume, a local preacher, living at that time near the present town of Hamilton, Ohio. His next stop was at the cabin of a family a few miles from Crume's by the name of Gray. After opening several preaching places in Ohio he struck General Wayne's old road from Hamilton to Ft. Wayne, which he says "seemed still fresh and plain." From this road he came upon an Indian trail which led him into Indiana, to the settlement above mentioned, the one known as the Kentucky settlement, near the present town of Richmond. Here he preached at the cabin of a Mr. Cox, where he formed a society. This society was small, because most of the people in this settlement were Baptists. The next preaching place was at McCarty's, more than forty miles down the Whitewater, seven miles above the entrance of that river into the state of Ohio. Here a flourishing society was formed. From McCarty's he went eleven miles down the river to the cabin of a Mr. Thomas, this class finally building a meeting house at Elizabethtown. From thence he went to the house of a Mr. Hays, between Elizabethtown and Lawrenceburg and formed another society. Oglesby also preached at Lawrenceburg, the county town of Dearborn county, on this first round, the town having been founded in 1802. From Lawrenceburg the preacher started north, up the Miami, preaching on both sides of the river, until he arrived at the place of beginning. This route was traveled by Oglesby every four weeks until the meeting of the Western conference, which was held that year in Tennessee, on September 15, 1806, and during his six months on this circuit he succeeded in gathering into Church membership sixty-seven persons.

Joseph Oglesby, the founder of the Whitewater circuit, was at that time a tall, slender, young man, in the prime of life. His hair, which inclined to be fair, was clipped short from the forehead half way back to the crown, and the remainder was allowed to grow eight or ten inches long, so as to reach down to his shoulders, and hung loosely about his neck. This peculiar method of hair dressing was recognized as the Methodist preacher fashion, and was quite generally followed by all the preachers. Oglesby's voice was a full bass and stentorian, but not harsh or grating. He had a great command of words and poured forth his thoughts and feelings with great volubility and zeal. The second year of the Whitewater circuit, (1806-1807) Thomas Hellums and Sela Paine were appointed as the circuit preachers. Hellums is described as "a grave, zealous, affectionate and weeping preacher." His countenance was always most solemn, "and his subjects of discourse were usually of a grave and pathetic cast. * * * The intonations of his voice were as solemn as death, and usually large tears dropped from his face most of the time while he was preaching.”

In this year Benjamin Lakin, whom we have met before, as one of the earliest Methodist itinerants to preach in Indiana, preached at a quarterly meeting held at McCarty’s. During one of his sermons on a Sabbath, he suddenly paused and said in a most solemn manner, “I feel an impression that there is some young man or woman in this house, who will be tramping in hell before this time next year.” Immediately, we are told by Allen Wiley, who was one of the young men present at that meeting, “all the young people whom I could see became deathly pale: and I suppose myself among the rest: for—I felt as awful as death, judgment and eternity could make me.”

Joseph Williams was the circuit preacher on the Whitewater circuit during the year 1807-1808, and that year many new neighborhoods were settled and taken in as preaching places, and the number of appointments on the circuit had increased to over twenty. Hugh Cull, a local preacher who had settled in the Whitewater country in 1805 and had done some preaching in the neighborhood, was employed to help Williams on the circuit, and at the close of the year the membership of the circuit was reported as 165 white and one colored.

The first entire circuit in the territory of Indiana was the Silver Creek, which was organized in 1807 with Moses Ashworth as the circuit preacher. This new circuit took in Clark’s grant, which had formerly been included within the Salt River and Shelby circuit of the Kentucky district. With the organization of this circuit, Indiana Methodism starts on its separate career. Moses Ashworth closed his first year with a camp-meeting, held in the Robertson's neighborhood, a few miles from Charlestown, and this was one of the first, if not the first camp-meeting to be held in Indiana.\(^1\) In the year 1808 a new district was added to the Western conference, and it received the name, Indiana district, and thus the name Indiana, appears on Methodist records for the first time. This new district had six circuits, namely: The Illinois, which included all the settlements in the great territory; the Missouri, another state-wide circuit; Maramack, Cold Water, and the two Indiana circuits, the Silver Creek and the Whitewater.\(^2\) Over this new district was placed as Presiding Elder, Samuel Parker, one of the local preachers who first introduced Methodist preaching in Indiana in the year 1801.

In the year 1809 a third Indiana circuit was formed, the first report of which appeared in the minutes for 1810. This circuit was the Vincennes and the preacher appointed to preach Methodist doctrine in this Roman Catholic stronghold was William Winans.\(^3\) The story is told that one of the first services conducted by the circuit rider in the old town of Vincennes was held on a Sabbath evening at the fort, on the Wabash. The congregation was made up of a few government officials, a few English speaking settlers, two or three Indians and the Governor of the territory, William Henry Harrison. There were only a few tallow candles to furnish light for the service, and one of these was held by the governor to enable the young circuit rider to read his text and line out the hymn.\(^4\) And it ought to be said, in this connection, that the first governor of Indiana territory, William Henry Harrison, was always the firm friend of the Methodist circuit rider, though he himself was a communicant of the Presbyterian Church.

Belonging to the Vincennes circuit was a neighborhood known as the Busroe settlement, located on the Wabash, which was visited by Peter Cartwright in 1808, and in this settlement he organized a Methodist society, in the following manner, which we will allow him to relate in his own way:

"I will state here a case which occurred at an early date in the state of Indiana, in a settlement called Busroe. Many of the early emigrants to that settlement were Methodists, Baptists and Cumberland Presbyterians. The Shaker priests, all apostates from the Baptist and Cumberland Presbyterians, went over among them. Many of them I was personally acquainted with and had given them letters when they removed from Kentucky to that new country.

"There was then no Methodist circuit preacher in that region. There was an old brother Collins, a local preacher, who withstood the Shakers, and in private combat was a full match for any of them; but he was not eloquent in debate, and hence the Shaker priests overcame my old brother, and by scores swept members of different churches away from their steadfastness into the muddy pools of Shakerism. The few who remained steadfast, sent to Kentucky for me, praying me to come over and help them. I sent an appointment with an invitation to meet any or all of the Shaker priests in public debate; but instead of meeting me they appointed a meeting in opposition, and warned the believers, as they called them, to keep away from my meeting; but from our former acquaintance and intimate friendship, many of them came to hear me. I preached to vast crowds for three hours, and I verily believe God helped me. The very foundation of every Shaker present was shaken from under him. They then besought me to go to the Shaker meeting that night. I went, and when I got there we had a great crowd. I proposed to them that we have a debate and they dared not refuse. The terms were these; a local preacher I had with me was to open the debate, then one or all of their preachers, if they chose, were to follow, and I was to bring up the rear.” To this agreement the Shakers, however, failed to comply, for after the debate was under way, one of the Shaker priests, as Peter Cartwright calls them, called all the shakers present to disperse, but the sturdy circuit preacher then arose and called upon the crowd to remain, and succeeded in holding a considerable number of them. He says, “When I arose to reply I felt a sense of the approbation of God, and that he would give me success. I addressed the multitude about three hours, and when I closed the argument, I opened the doors of the church and invited all that would renounce Shakerism to come and give me their hand. Forty-seven came forward and then and there renounced the dreadful delusion. The next day I followed those that fled; and I went from cabin to cabin, taking the names of those that returned to the solid foundation of truth, and my number rose to eighty-seven. I then organized them into a regular society and then next fall had a preacher sent them; and perhaps this victory may be considered among the first fruits of Methodism in that part of the new country.”

24 Peter Cartwright’s Autobiography, 53-55. The Shakers were a communistic sect officially known as “The United Society of Believers in Christ’s Second Coming.” The Shakers did not recognize marriage as a Christian institution and considered it less perfect than the celibate state. They were very active in Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana for a number of years after 1800. Shaker communities were founded in Southern Indiana, among
Much of the preaching of the circuit riders was of a controversial character, largely due to the fact that Methodism was misunderstood and preached against by other denominations, and the Methodist itinerant felt called upon to defend his teaching. A Baptist who overhearing a conversation concerning the Arminian magazine said he had always understood the word Arminian to mean one who trusted in the arm of flesh for salvation, and he stated that he did not know that Methodism believed and taught "free grace." Many thought that Arminian meant the same as Arianism, which misconception led to bitter attacks upon Methodism. But undoubtedly the controversial character of the preaching was one of the things which attracted people to the Methodist meetings, because most people enjoy denunciations.

In the fall of 1810 the Whitewater circuit was divided, the lower part receiving the name of Enon circuit, which was a Scriptural name meaning abundance of waters, and this new circuit was well described by this name, for there were twelve creeks to be crossed by the preacher in his rounds of the circuit, and many times he was compelled to travel many miles out of his way, over high and steep hills, and at this time there were no roads and few paths to guide him on his way. This name Enon was rather too vague, however, for it meant nothing to the average person, and the next year the circuit name was changed to Lawrenceburg. The first circuit preacher on the Enon circuit was Walter Griffith, who was a young man, in the prime of life, and full of zeal. And indeed all of the pioneer preachers in Indiana were young men. Griffith found an excellent helper on the circuit, in the person of Elijah Sparks, a lawyer living near Lawrenceburg, who had formerly been a traveling preacher, but on his marriage, had located, for in those days, to marry was equivalent to ceasing from traveling. Sparks had moved to Indiana from Kentucky in 1806 and until his death in 1815 he was one of the most popular preachers in Indiana, especially at camp-meetings. In those days there was great prejudice against lawyers and many thought a lawyer could not be a christian, but Sparks succeeded in overcoming this prejudice, although he continued to practice law and preach at the same time. In 1814 he was appointed Judge for the third circuit of Indiana territory, which he held until his death, the following year.27

In 1811 there was a division of the Vincennes circuit, the Patoka circuit being created in the southwest corner of the territory. The territory of this new circuit mostly lay along the Patoka river.28 The year 1811 was a notable one in the history of the territory of Indiana, and also in the history of Indiana Methodism, for it was in the fall of this year that the battle of Tippecanoe was fought and won by General Harrison, and it was also the year of the great earthquake. These quakes were of the most severe kind and continued during most of the winter of 1811 and 1812. The effect of these shocks upon Indiana Methodism and religion in general is thus described by an eyewitness: "As a result of the continued quakes the whole country became alarmed and the most vile and hardened sinners began to tremble and quake, and go to meeting, and weep and pray. Now every preacher traveling and local, with the exhorters began to hold meetings with more earnestness than ever, in almost all directions, and Baptist ministers did the same, and it seemed as if almost everybody would become religious that winter and spring. Some men were converted and became preachers, whose conversion I had been in the habit of regarding as almost as hopeless as the conversion of the devil himself. There was one man by the name of William Ramsey, whom I had regarded as the most profane and wicked man I ever knew, who became as tame and timid as a lamb. A few months afterward he was soundly converted, he became a useful preacher and continued so for years, while he remained in our part of the country."

The success of this year, largely due to the earthquake, was very great, and there was a large ingathering of members. The Whitewater circuit increased from 567 to 843, an increase of 276; the Lawrenceburg circuit increased from 306 to 480, an increase of 174; the increase in the Silver Creek circuit was from 375 to 555; while the Vincennes circuit was divided, probably as the result of the great increase in members and preaching places. This great increase throughout the circuits of Indiana, however, proved to be an unhealthy growth, and the next year there was a reaction, resulting in a considerable loss both of members and zeal, and we are told that it was some years before the Church was as healthy and vigorous as it was formerly.

Another cause of the decrease in membership following the year 1811, was the breaking out of the War of 1812. The alarm of war drove many of the settlers to the block houses, because of the growing hostility of the Indians; while a considerable number of the frontiersmen entered the service of their country as volunteers, and the work of the circuit riders was hindered materially.

In 1812 the Whitewater circuit was again divided, the part east of the present town of Brookville was divided.

called the Oxford circuit, part of which lay within the state of Ohio. The circuit embraced much of the present Franklin county, the whole of Union county, the settled parts of Wayne county and perhaps a part of Fayette county.\textsuperscript{31} The first preacher on this new circuit was Moses Crume, one of the most useful of all the early Indiana preachers.\textsuperscript{32} Like so many of the other early Indiana preachers, Crume was a native of Virginia, moved to Kentucky and from there came to Ohio, and later to Indiana territory. In the course of his career as a Methodist itinerant he travelled from Madison, Indiana, to Urbana, Ohio, and from the Miami to the western line of Indiana. He has been described as resembling Washington in appearance. He was never a popular preacher, due to his lack of voice and energy in the pulpit but his sermons were always sound and good, and was a thorough student for those days, and was familiar with all the current theological discussion. He always carried Canno's marginal Bible with him and it was filled with marks from Genesis to Revelation. He was thoroughly familiar also with the doctrine, usages and discipline of the Methodist Church, and was a most firm and just administrator.

The preacher on the Whitewater circuit during the first year of the war of 1812 was John Strange, who was an extremely popular and talented itinerant. During this year he traveled from block-house to block-house with his gun on his shoulder, to defend himself from the Indians, and on one occasion while on his rounds, on reaching one of the block-houses and learning that all its occupants were unharmed since his last visit, he started up the hymn:

In 1812 the Western conference was divided into the Ohio and Tennessee conferences and the Indiana circuits were divided between them; the circuits in the southeastern corner of the territory were included in the Ohio conference, while those in the southwest section were in the Tennessee conference. The circuits were divided among three districts, the Miami and Salt River districts of the Ohio conference and the Wabash district of the Tennessee conference. There were very frequent changes made in the circuits and districts, and for that reason it is difficult to follow them, through several years. For instance, the Wabash district appears only in the reports for 1812 and 1813, and never appears again; Patoka circuit, started in 1811, disappears the two following years and again appears in 1814.34

Among the early Indiana Presiding Elders, were John Sale, Samuel Parker, Soloman Langdon, Learner Blackman, William Burke, James Axley, James Ward, Peter Cartwright, Charles Holliday and Jesse Walker.35 Altogether they were a remarkable group of men, and every one of them is worthy of a permanent place in the history of the great state of Indiana. The Jesuit Fathers, in the days of exploration on this continent, undertook no greater task than the task which was undertaken by these rude, but earnest and upright frontier preachers. The circuit riders were no less devoted and many times as well qualified to preach, as were the Presiding Elders. In fact there was very little distinction made between the Elder and the traveling preacher, and many of the early preachers in Indiana became presiding elders.

John Sale was the Presiding Elder of the Ohio district at the time of the formation of the Whitewater circuit, and he and William McKindree were therefore the first Indiana Presiding Elders. Sale was a Virginian by birth, was received on trial into the ministry of the Methodist Church in 1796, and traveled his first circuits in Virginia and North Carolina. In the year 1800 he was sent to the Kentucky circuit, in 1802 he traveled the Scioto circuit in Ohio; in 1803 he was appointed to the Miami circuit, also in Ohio; in 1804 he again served a circuit in Kentucky, and was made Presiding Elder of the Ohio district in 1805. At that time the Ohio district was probably the largest district in Methodism. It embraced a part of Virginia, all the settled parts of Ohio, and after the spring of 1806 the southeastern part of Indiana. He traveled this district three years, when in 1808 the district was divided, the western part being called the Miami district, which he served two years. The next four years he traveled the Kentucky district, then two more years he was on the Miami district and from 1816 to his death, in 1826, he served circuits in Ohio.

John Sale married while on the Ohio district and was one of the first two married traveling preachers in the western country. The other of the earliest married preachers was William Burke, who was Presiding Elder of the Green River district in 1810 when it included the Silver Creek circuit. Bishop Asbury discouraged marriage among the preachers, knowing the increased hardships marriage would bring to the preachers themselves, but especially to the preachers' wives. For this reason many of the pioneer preachers ceased to travel, as the active ministry was termed, while they were still young men, simply because they married, and were advised to locate; that is, they settled down on a farm, generally, or entered some other profession though they did not cease to be preachers or members of the conference. At this early time sixty-four dollars was the amount allowed a traveling preacher, and he must provide in most cases his own horse and equipment, such as saddle and saddle-bags, and in few cases did he receive all he was allowed. William Burke says, that after his marriage, "I met with every discouragement that could be thrown in my way. People and preachers said, 'You had better locate.' I shared equally with the single men when they were on the circuit with me, in order to keep peace. * * * One winter I had to use a borrowed blanket instead of a cloak or overcoat." By 1810, however, it became much more common for preachers to marry, though all were not as successful as they might have been in selecting wives suitable for a circuit rider. In 1811 a junior preacher by the name of Homes was sent to aid Moses Crume on the Whitewater circuit. Homes was married and his wife traveled, for the most part, with him on the circuit. She was an incessant smoker, and her husband would be compelled to stop frequently at the cabins to light her pipe. Naturally this particular preacher's wife soon became most unpopular on the circuit, not only because of her smoking, but because of her sharp and cutting comments, concerning the food and lodging at the various cabins where they were entertained.

In appearance John Sale was a heavy, medium sized man, and very neat in his dress. He was possessed of a large share of good, strong common sense, and was particularly careful to regard the decencies of public worship, and would suffer nothing that was extravagant in religious assemblies, if he could hinder it. I have found, indeed, common sense to be one of the characteristics of the early Methodist pioneer preacher although it has been the popular conception that the Methodist circuit rider courted religious extravagances and thrived upon them. Sale was also a strict disciplinarian, and was always careful to see that Methodist usages were enforced. From 1810 to 1820 there was a great controversy among Methodist preachers, concerning infant purity and innate depravity, and for a time it seemed that it would result in splitting Methodism on the frontier into two camps, but Sale, always a kind and zealous peace-maker, was largely instrumental in healing the dispute. Allen Wiley says that “perhaps Methodism in much of Ohio and Indiana is more indebted to John Sale for its symmetry and beauty than to any one man on earth or in heaven.”

Soloman Langdon, who served a number of years as Presiding Elder of the Miami district, when that district included three of the southeastern Indiana circuits, was a New Englander by birth, and began to preach in his native section in 1800. He came west in 1807, served several circuits in Ohio, and was appointed Presiding Elder of the Miami district in 1810. In appearance he was a tall, noble man, and had great gravity and dignity “in all his ministrations.” Wiley says, “He was a good successor to John Sale, not similar except in good sense and piety. They were both men well calculated to give stability and perpetuity to Methodism in a new country.” Langdon was not an emotional preacher, but he was a “sound and talented man, and did much to disabuse the public mind of misconceptions concerning Methodism.”

Peter Cartwright’s connection with Indiana Methodism was limited to the year he served on the Salt River and Shelby circuit in Kentucky in 1805, when he crossed the Ohio River and preached in Indiana, to his visit to the Busroe settlement in 1808 when he put the Shakers to flight, and to the year 1812-1813, when he served as Presiding Elder of the Wabash district, which included within its bounds the Vincennes and the Patoka circuits. It is unnecessary to give an extended account here, of this perhaps the most famous of all Methodist frontier preachers. His Autobiography, which reads like a veritable fairy tale, is still sold and read by thousands, and through that medium his fame has gone far beyond the bounds of the Methodist church.

James Axley, who was the Presiding Elder on the Wabash district in 1811-1812, was one of the peculiar and interesting characters to be found among the early preachers in the western country. He was a man of little education, but was genuine, and tremendously effective in his work. He seemed to be afraid of nothing, except sin, and yet he was as teachable as a child. On one occasion when Peter Cartwright and he were dining at the home of the Governor of Kentucky, among other things on the table before them was fried chicken, and Axley, who had evidently had little experience with table etiquette, called the family dog to his chair and threw the chicken bones on the carpet for the dog to eat. When they went to their room Cartwright rebuked him for his bad manners, and so mortified was Axley because of his ignorance, that he actually wept.\(^4^1\) On another occasion Axley was preaching in a private house with a chair before him for a pulpit, when two young ladies came in and sat just in front of the preacher. The young ladies had on dresses with short sleeves and low necks, for such things were fashionable then as now. Axley had a large bandanna handkerchief on the back of his chair, and he paused in the service and handed the handkerchief to the young ladies with the request that they would cover their bosoms.\(^4^2\)

Axley was very strong in his opposition to slavery and whiskey, as indeed were most of the frontier preachers, at this date. After he ceased preaching, and located, he made his living and supported his family by farming, and he was wont to testify on all proper occasions, that "his logs were rolled, his house raised, and his grain cut without whiskey; and though he had plentyful crops of corn, not the first track of a negro's foot was ever seen in one of his fields." On one occasion Axley was discoursing on the conformity to the world among Christians, particularly in fashionable dress and manners. In his address he held a sort of a colloquy with an imaginary apologist, seated at the other end of the congregation. The pleas and excuses of this imaginary person were given in an altered tone of voice, and then assuming his natural voice he would reply. "But sir," his imaginary man says, "some of your Methodist preachers themselves dress in fashionable style, and in air and manner enact the dandy."

"O no, my friend, that can not be. Methodist preachers know their calling better. They are men of more sense than that, and would not stoop so low as to disgrace themselves and the sacred office they hold by such gross inconsistency of character."

"Well, sir, if you won't take my word for it, just look at those young preachers in the pulpit behind you."

Axley then in seeming surprise turned around and facing the two or three rather fashionably dressed junior preachers seated in the rear of the pulpit, surveyed them from head to foot for several minutes, while they quailed under his keen glance. Then turning around to the congregation, and leaning a little forward with his arm extended and his eyes fixed on the supposed apologist at the back of the room, he said in a subdued voice. "If you please, sir, we'll drop the subject."

The Presiding Elder par excellence in early Indiana Methodism was Samuel Parker, especially from the standpoint of eloquence. He was the Presiding Elder appointed to take charge of the new Indiana district, at its formation in 1808, and served as the Presiding Elder of the Miami district in 1811. He was a native of New Jersey and began to preach in 1800, though he was not admitted to membership in the Western conference until 1805. His first circuit was the Hinkstone in Kentucky, and he served various circuits in Kentucky and Ohio until 1808, when he became Presiding Elder of the new Indiana district. Later he was appointed to a similar office in the Miami district, and in 1815 he was made Presiding Elder of the Kentucky district, which he held four years. At the end of that time he was sent to Mississippi to take charge of the new work there, but his career was soon cut short by his untimely death in 1819. Samuel Parker is a good example of the itinerant who literally burned himself out in the service of the Church.43

Parker was a tall, slim, awkward man, with large blue eyes and an enormous Roman nose. He had a long chin which he used in the winter time to hold up the blanket which served in lieu of a great coat. A hole was cut in the center of the blanket, large enough to let his small head through, and when it was bitter cold, he would hang the forepart of the hole on his chin and bid defiance to wind and cold. And when his bed covering proved not sufficient, his blanket was made to serve for that purpose, and it was frequently brought into use, for bed covering was scant, especially at Quarterly meeting. There were few churches in those early days and quarterly meetings were held at private cabins, and on those occasions they would be crowded with strangers. When bed time came the "sisterhood" took the beds while the men would "pile down on the floor by the dozen," and with feet extended to the fire, would sleep soundly until the morning.

Let us picture this homely, awkward frontier preacher, clad in ill-fitting, homespun preacher garb,—for there was a well-recognized preacher garb then as now,—as he conducts the preaching in one of these rude cabins on a quarterly meeting occasion. He places his chair before him as his pulpit, and begins to read a hymn, in a soft and charming voice. After the singing of the hymn, comes the prayer, which is uttered with such eloquence and pathos "that heaven and earth seemed in juxtaposition." And then follows the sermon on the text, "The upright love thee." One who was present on such an occasion and heard this very sermon says, "I have since heard the most able divines in the country, but his description of the good man's love to God and God's love to man, I have not been privileged to hear equaled since, and indeed I never expect to hear anything this side the throne of God which will surpass it."44

The camp-meeting, however, was the place where the early Methodist preacher had the best opportunity to display his powers in the pulpit. It was customary for a camp-meeting to be held on each circuit at some time during the summer months, and at such meetings several preachers from adjoining circuits, and sometimes preachers from a distance would be present. The first camp-meeting held in Indiana was probably the one conducted in the Robertson neighborhood, in the vicinity of Charlestown in the summer of 1807. In 1808 there was a camp-meeting conducted on the Whitewater circuit, and after this date we have records of many Indiana camp-meetings. In 1810 there were two camp-meetings conducted on the Whitewater circuit. At one of these meetings the wife of a local preacher, Jeremiah Meek by name, became ecstatic and continued in this state for about three weeks, during which time she scarcely ate, drank or slept. This was too much for her nerves and it resulted in the unbalancing of her mind, and she remained so for many years. At the other camp-meeting, held on this circuit in 1810, there were five preachers present besides the regular circuit preachers, and we are told by one who was present, that this meeting made a "powerful impression in favor of religion in general and Methodism in particular."

In 1815 two new Indiana circuits were added to the six already in existence, the Wabash and the Blue River circuits. The Wabash circuit was in the southwestern corner of the state just below the Patoka circuit, and the Blue River circuit was situated along the banks of that stream, just to the west of the Silver Creek circuit. It is interesting to note that all the Indiana circuits, up to 1816, were named after streams with the exception of the Vincennes and the Lawrenceburg. The reason for these names is obvious. The early settlements were along the rivers and creeks, and these streams and the valleys served as the natural highways for the new country, and the circuit naturally derived its name from the stream along which the cabins of the settlers belonging to the circuit, were located. There were in those days few towns or post offices after which circuits might be named, and when finally towns of some importance did come into existence, the circuits soon came to bear their names. This naming of circuits after streams was not in any sense peculiar to Indiana, but the same practice was followed all over the western country. The Blue River circuit was in the Salt River district of the Ohio conference, while the Wabash circuit was placed in the Illinois district of the Tennessee conference. The first circuit preachers on these new circuits were James Simmons for the Blue River circuit and Daniel M'Henry for the Wabash.

At the beginning of Indiana Methodism there were of course no meeting houses, but in the winter time the cabins of the settlers were the temples, and in the spring, just as soon as it became warm enough, the people worshipped out under the trees. It was not long, however, before log meeting houses began to be erected, for there was plenty of material, and a Methodist revival generally resulted in providing willing hands to erect the desired house of worship. The men "were skillful with the chopping ax, the broad ax, the maul and wedge, the frow and whip saw, and the woods were full of tall and straight-boled beeches, maples and ash trees with a fair sprinkling of straight-grained white oaks and poplars. All the men had to do in order to have a meeting house was to go into the forest and cut, hew, split, rive, whip-saw and build—and they did it."47 When the day for raising the house came round a general invitation was sent out and volunteer help came from all quarters. Any man was considered a very mean one indeed who did not give muscular aid on such an occasion. Thus were the first Methodist meeting houses erected in Indiana, and they soon began to rise up in all the circuits. During the first year on the Silver Creek circuit three such meeting houses were erected. One of the first meeting houses to be erected on the Whitewater circuit was the Meeks meeting house, located on Clear creek, a mile and a half north-east of the present town of Salisbury. This meeting house was erected in 1808. In 1809 the Cain meeting house, a few miles north of Richmond, was erected, and in 1810 a third meeting house was built at the little town of Boston. The Cain meeting house was dedicated by Rev. John Summerville, who preached from the text, "Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle bow, out of him every oppressor together." In these log meeting houses there were none of the comforts known to modern churches, and the exterior and interior was rough and rudely finished. The roofs were made of clapboards, held on by weight poles; the floors were of puncheons; the chimneys of sticks and clay, while the seats were split logs hewn smoothly with an ax. The pulpit was a box-like structure made of riven boards, often of oak, smoothly shaven with a drawing knife. 19

American Methodism in the year 1816 sustained a great loss in the death of Bishop Francis Asbury, who died on the 31st of March of this year. 20 To him more than to any other, is due the honor of being called the father of American Methodism. He came to America in 1771, saturated with Wesley's thoughts, and resolutely determined to carry out Wesley's plan. Instead of settling down in the centers of population, he heard and heeded the call of the wilderness, and himself setting the example, he sent his preachers through the forests and over the mountains to take the Gospel to the far flung outposts of civilization. "For nearly fifty years he was the outrider of an ever-growing army of apostolic men who knew neither self nor fear, who conquered a continent and covered it with a network of circuits and conferences." 21 Although Methodism in Indiana was not founded by Asbury, personally, yet it was his spirit which fired the hearts and inspired the deeds of the McKindreess, and Sales, and Parkers and all the others.

By 1816 there were eight circuits in Indiana with a total membership of 2,699 whites and eight colored. The colored members were found only on the Silver Creek and Lawrenceburg circuits. These eight circuits were divided among three districts; the Whitewater, Lawrenceburg and Oxford circuits were in the Miami district; the Silver Creek and the Blue River circuits were in the Salt River district; while the three southwestern circuits, the Vincennes, the Patoka and the Wabash were in the Illinois district of the Tennessee conference. The Miami and the Salt River districts were in the Ohio conference.

CHAPTER II.

INDIANA METHODISM, 1816-1832.

IN 1816 Indiana's star was added to the American constellation. As early as 1812 a petition had been drawn up and presented to congress, asking that Indiana be made a state.\(^1\) Nothing was done at this time, and it was not until February, 1815, that a petition from the inhabitants of Indiana Territory, asking for admission into statehood, was brought before the House. During the summer following this petition, there was much agitation throughout all the Territory. Newspapers published accounts of new town sites which were being laid out, and statistics were gathered (though there is doubt as to their authenticity) stating that the population was 63,897. The Enabling Act had appointed May 13, 1816, as the time for the election of delegates to the Constitutional Convention. The only restriction as to the work of the convention was that the constitution should exclude slavery, the same restriction which had been laid down in the Ordinance of 1787. Methodism was represented in this convention by Hugh Cull from Wayne county, and Dennis Pennington, of Harrison county.\(^2\) Both were interested in politics as well as religion and exercised a strong influence on the convention.

From this time there was a rapid increase in the population. The immigration was still chiefly from the Carolinas, Tennessee and Kentucky, though a number of settlers from the Western part of New York and the Northwestern section of Pennsylvania were forced into Indiana because of economic causes, during the early part of 1817. The summer of 1816 had been cold and the supply of grain was consequently limited. As a result of this condition many people floated down the Alleghany and Ohio rivers on rafts and settled in Dearborn, Jennings, Switzerland and Washington counties. These people were much interested in politics, and while during the period of territorial government, the offices had usually been filled by Virginians, from 1816-1824 the government was more frequently in the hands of settlers from Pennsylvania. There were several settlements directly from Europe, such as the Swiss at Vevay, but none became strong enough to exert an active influence in politics.3

One noticeable fact in regard to church, and particularly Methodist history in Indiana, is that the first societies, as a general rule, were formed in the country. In many of the towns, the property holders and office seekers were opposed to all forms of religion. Among the early settlers in Indiana were "criminals from the east and others of criminal tendencies, who found the restraints of the law disagreeable." This class took up its headquarters in the villages and about the village taverns.4 This fact made the village an unprofitable field, while those who settled in the country districts were more easily influenced by religious teaching. The moral impress of the first settlers remains in many towns to this day. In some cases, the proprietor of the town, the clerk of the court, or the landlord of the tavern gave tone to the morals of the community. In other cases some man of wealth or some family of culture made an impress that was abid-

Brookville, Charlestown, Corydon, Bloomington and Indianapolis were fortunate in this respect, for their early and most influential citizens were usually religious, or recognized that respect was due to religion, and that its influence on society was decidedly helpful, and they endeavored to promote its advancement. But we must give credit to some less worthy methods of promulgating religious influence. The bar-room was often the first place thrown open for preaching in a western village, and the landlord would pride himself on maintaining good order during the service. The first sermons preached in Rising Sun and New Albany were in bar-rooms. A sermon preached by James Conwell, of Laurel, led to the conversion of a tavern-keeper, who disposed of his liquors and opened his bar-room for preaching, and it remained the permanent place of worship until the erection of the village church.

In 1816 a readjustment was made by which southwest section of Indiana was to be included in the Missouri conference, which had been organized that year, holding its first session in Turkey Hill Settlement in Illinois. The Indiana circuits were in the Illinois District. The boundaries of this new conference extended into four States and Territories—Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas. At the sessions of the two conferences, containing Indiana circuits, in 1818 we find the following adjustment of Indiana circuits: Ohio Conference, Lebanon District, contained White-water circuit, Miami District, Lawrenceburg, Madison and Oxford circuits. Missouri Conference Illinois District, contained Indian Creek, Blue River, Harrison, Vincennes, Patoka and Pigeon or Little Pigeon, and it is also probable that the Wabash circuit was within the bounds of the state.

From 1815 to 1820 was a period of increased settlement and of greater development in the sections already settled. With the increase in population the value of property also increased. In 1820 a malarial fever epidemic in the southern section of the state, particularly on the lower Wabash, checked immigration, and many left that region and settled further north. The growth of Methodism had kept pace with the growth of population. By 1817 it was found that the church had completely overcome the great loss in members caused by the war with Great Britain in 1812-1814. The year 1817 showed an increase of 849 members over the preceding year, and 580 over the number before the war began. In 1810 the population of Indiana was 24,520 and Methodism numbered its members at 755. In 1820 the population of the State had increased to 147,178, and Methodists to 4,410.7

In 1820 Indiana was still divided between the Ohio and Missouri conferences; the five circuits, Lawrenceburg, Whitewater, Greenville, Oxford and Madison being in the Ohio Conference, Miami District, while in the Missouri Conference an Indiana District had been created and contained the following circuits: Charlestown, Blue River, Bloomington, Vincennes, Patoka, Ohio, Mount Sterling and Corydon.8

This table of the increase of membership, and circuits, so briefly given, cannot tell of the hardships endured, and the trials encountered, by the circuit rider. The itinerant system was peculiarly adapted to the time and country. It effectually prevented preachers from forming local ties, or creating local prejudices, which might have injured their effectiveness. The poverty which accompanied it kept them foot-loose of all worldly things. It might be compared in some ways, to the Jesuit system of missionary work, and certainly it was as effective as the work of the Catholics among the Indians and half-breeds. While the communities to which the itinerant preachers came might be rude and illiterate in some ways, still, there were the germs and possibilities for future growth and development, which had been entirely lacking in the Indian villages of an earlier period. The preaching of these devout men—and devout men they were in the truest sense—was a great moral and educational force. Even when it influenced men's minds through fear, it prompted them to good conduct, as one of the necessary means of keeping out of the "eternal hell of quenchless fire." True enough, the preachers themselves were men of little education, but they knew thoroughly the messages they were to deliver and they were very much in earnest. Their speech might be ungrammatical at times, but their zeal was white hot with the fervor of conviction and their eloquence lost nothing in effectiveness by reason of rudeness in rhetoric or inaccuracy of diction.

We picture the typical itinerant of that day as a "tall, rawboned, hollow-eyed man, who dressed according to the Methodist preacher fashion of that day, namely, round-breasted coat, long vest with corners cut off, short breeches and long stockings, with his hair turned back from about midway between the forehead and the crown, and permitted to grow down to the shoulders."9 One who saw Bishop William McKendree near Washington, Indiana, on his way to the Missouri Conference in 1822 or 1823 describes him as wearing short clothes. His coat had a high-rolling collar, a long and very sharp tail, with large brass buttons on 9 One of the early itinerants as described by Allen Wiley.

But the circuit rider was by no means so well dressed as a Bishop, who commanded the munificent salary of perhaps $300 a year, if he could collect it, while many times, even as late as 1820 the circuit rider received little pay worth naming. The circuit rider on the Bloomington circuit in 1820 received as a part of his quarterage home made leather socks, and jeans. The preachers sometimes wore whole suits of leather, because leather resisted the briers, as wool could not.

In 1821-1822 Allen Wiley was serving the White Water circuit with James T. Wells as his associate. Wells was a very peculiar man, and although he was conscientious and extremely religious, yet because of his peculiarities he was more of a hindrance than a help. During this year Wiley says: "I then had a wife and seven children, and my entire receipts for house rent, fuel, table expenses and quarterage, amounted this year to seventy-six dollars. Then there were no estimates for house rent, and quarterage for children; so that if there were a married and a single preacher on the circuit the collections were divided into three parts, and the married man received two parts and the single man one; or if one preacher had ten children and the other none, they both shared equal when they were both married men."

Between the years 1820 and 1824 a number of new circuits had been created within the limits of Indiana, and in the year 1824 there were seventeen circuits, wholly or partially within the state. In the Miami District of the Ohio Conference, over which John Strange was the presiding elder, there were Oxford, Greenville, Whitewater, Lawrenceburg, Madison and Connersville circuits; while in the Indiana District of the Missouri Conference, over which William Beauchamp presided there were eleven circuits, namely, Charlestown, Flatrock, Blue River, Bloomington, Honey Creek, Vincennes, Patoka, Mount Sterling, Corydon, Indianapolis and Eel River.\textsuperscript{13}

In 1821 William Cravens was sent to Indianapolis to organize a circuit. A few Methodist families had settled on White river in the vicinity of Indianapolis, and the conference wisely saw the necessity of the early planting of religion in the center of the new state. Cravens was just the man for the new circuit, zealous, fearless and an indefatigable worker. Coming on horseback to his new circuit, he met with swollen streams and in attempting to ford Sugar creek, he was swept from his horse and thrown into the stream. A settler seeing the horse come out of the stream without a rider went to the bank to investigate; he saw a large, middle aged man crawling out of the water upon the limbs of a tree-top which had fallen into the stream. As he was climbing onto the tree the settler heard him soliloquizing, "Well, bless God, I would go to heaven if it were Sugar creek all the way."\textsuperscript{14} Cravens was a Virginian and while a resident in that state had been fearless in his denunciation of slavery and drunkenness, and when he moved to Indiana he did not cease his denunciations of both evils. In 1812, Allen Wiley says, Oxford circuit was part in Ohio and part in Indiana. Wiley includes these two circuits in the lists of Indiana circuits in his article of June 26, 1846, in the Western Christian Advocate for the year 1821-1822. Greenville circuit was probably partly in Indiana until 1827. Part of Oxford circuit was in Indiana until 1828. Western Christian Advocate, July 17, 1846. (Allen Wiley, Article No. XXVI.)

states, and were drawing their wages, while many more had sold their slaves and had purchased homes for themselves in Indiana with the price of their slaves. These he denounced as "hypocrites, and worse than the actual slave holder."

An early Steward's record of the old Connersville circuit, which was organized in 1822, affords considerable insight into the method of paying the preacher, in the pioneer days. The record reads as follows:

In 1824 the presiding elder of the Indiana District of the Missouri conference was William Beauchamp, one of the most eloquent preachers in the west. He was a native of Delaware, his father having been a Methodist preacher in that state, and also in western Virginia. In 1794 Beauchamp joined the Conference and was appointed to the Pittsburg circuit, and later served circuits in New York, Boston and Provincetown, Massachusetts. On his marriage in 1801 he located, and later moved to the western part of Virginia. Though he was no longer serving regular circuits, yet his interest in religion and the church did not wane, and in 1811 he published at Marietta, Ohio, "Essays on the Truth of the Christian Religion," which had a wide circulation and reading among other denominations as well as in the Methodist church. In 1816 he became the editor of the "Western Christian Monitor," a monthly religious paper, established at Chillicothe, Ohio, especially to combat Arian and Pelagian doctrines. In 1822 he resumed the active ministry and continued it until his death, which occurred on the 8th of October, 1824, in the fifty-third year of his age, in the State of Indiana.

Beauchamp was styled the Demosthenes of the west. His voice was remarkably tender with a note of quite indescribable sweetness about it. In argument, however, his voice became elevated and it then assumed a deep and hollow tone, which had a telling effect upon opponents, and on one occasion literally staggered an antagonist who, on attempting to leave the house during the sermon of Beauchamp, staggered, and catching a railing, sank into his seat, seemingly overwhelmed. 17

Five typical circuit preachers during the twenties and thirties in Indiana were, Allen Wiley, Calvin Ruter, James Armstrong, James Havens and Joseph Tarkington. Allen Wiley commenced his career as an itinerant in 1816, his first circuit being the Lawrenceburg which he traveled with Russel Biglow as the senior preacher, and for a period of thirty-one years his name is a conspicuous one in the annals of Indiana Methodism, and in the writing of an account of early Methodism in Indiana perhaps his name will appear more frequently than that of any other.

James Havens was admitted on trial into the Ohio Conference in 1820. He entered the ministry under peculiarly discouraging circumstances, and in the face of them he achieved distinction and success in his chosen work. He had a very limited education, in fact when he entered the conference he could scarcely read. He had a large family, and was very poor in this world's goods, but by indefatigable work and by sheer force of character he became one of the conspicuous leaders in the church. He was a man of medium height, but was very strong and his courage and strength were often called into play in subduing the lawless and protecting those who desired to worship God in quietness. He gathered multitudes into the church and in spite of his late start he became an able defender of the truths of Christianity and the possessor of considerable personal culture. 18

James Armstrong was a native of Ireland and was brought to this country by his parents when a child. He was converted and joined the church in Philadelphia where he was licensed to preach. In 1821 he came to Indiana and in the fall of that year he joined the Illinois Conference. He was an excellent administrator and served many terms as a presiding elder, and was exceedingly successful in winning people for the church. He was supplied with a great fund of ready wit, which he often used as a keen weapon, to the confounding of self-conceited skeptics of which the frontier seemed to possess an oversupply. On one occasion he was preaching in the hall at New Harmony, Indiana, which was open to all denominations or to any one who had any message to give. It was the custom of a certain Mr. Jennings, one of the residents of the community, to rise in the meetings and question the preachers. He accordingly rose in his place while James Armstrong was preaching and asked, “Mr. Armstrong, how do you know you have a soul?” Armstrong answered, “I feel it.” “Did you ever smell, taste, see, or hear your soul,” said the questioner. “No,” said Armstrong. “Then you have four senses against you,” replied the skeptic. Then Armstrong asked his questioner, “Mr. Jennings, did you ever have the toothache?” “Yes,” said Jennings. “Did you ever smell, taste, see, or hear the toothache?” asked the preacher. “No,” replied Jennings. “Then,” said Armstrong, “you have four senses against you.”

Joseph Tarkington began his ministry under James Armstrong, who in 1824 was the presiding elder of the Indiana District of the Missouri Conference. His theological schooling consisted in traveling with the presiding elder for five weeks on the district, where he observed and learned what he could of the work to which he had given his life. One of the first sermons which Tarkington attempted to preach was from the text, "Prepare to Meet Thy God." He said, "I was badly scared but the wife of Rev. J. W. McReynolds shouted and helped me out; for I quit when she commenced." One of the first circuits traveled by Tarkington was the old Patoka circuit. "I got as pay for that year," he says, "nine dollars and a pair of trousers."20

Calvin Ruter entered the Ohio Conference in 1818 and was immediately transferred to the Illinois country as one of the group of volunteers who were sent into the new country. He entered so heartily into his itinerant duties that his health soon gave way under the strain. Several times during his ministry he was forced to take a supernumerary relation, but with returning health he re-entered the active ministry and continued his work. He became the first secretary of the Indiana Conference at its organization in 1832, and his name appears conspicuously upon the records of the church in Indiana for many years.

Few of the men who planted Methodism in the State of Indiana were educated men in the sense in which we now consider that term. Their schooling was as a rule very limited, but somehow they became efficient interpreters of a larger life, and as a class, they developed a keenness of mind, and a readiness of wit that has rarely been equaled. They were men of few books, but they must have absorbed the few they possessed. They always carried some books with them on the circuit, in their saddle-bags, and like Wesley many of them read and pondered as they rode through the woods. The circuit-rider always carried a Bible and hymn book, and a discipline, and usually a copy of Wesley's Sermons or Fletcher's Appeal. 21

The General Conference of 1824 divided the Missouri and Ohio Conferences, and placed the States of Illinois and Indiana into a new Conference, which was called the Illinois. The time and place of the session of the Missouri Conference for 1824 had been fixed six months before the General Conference met, and as the time was short, it was decided that for the first year the two Conferences should hold their sessions at the same time and place. Therefore, in October of the year 1824, three bishops, McKendree, Roberts and Soule, were present at this joint session of the Conferences held at Looking Glass Prairie, Missouri. The following year, however, the two were permanently separated, and the new Illinois Conference met at Charlestown, Indiana, in August, 1825. 22 The year started with an increase of six new circuits within the state, Rushville, Salem, Paoli, Boonville, Vermillion and Mt. Vernon.

This was still the days of big circuits. In 1825 Vincennes circuit included the following preaching places: In Knox county, Vincennes, Cane's, Thomas's, Snyder's, Terebaugh's, Nicholson's, Hawkins'; in Davis county, Bethel Meeting-house, Stuckey's; Thomas Havell's, Widow Stone's, T. Stafford's, Ballon's; in Martin county, Hammond's, Clark's, Mount Pleasant, Love's, Maner's in Green county, and back again in Davis county to Bratton's, William's, Osmon's and Florer's. 23 In 1828 the Rushville circuit included Rushville, county seat of Rush county, Greensburg, county seat of Decatur county, Shelbyville, the county seat of Shelby county, and went within a mile of Greenfield, east along the National road as far as Blue river, and formerly it had gone as far north as Newcastle, county seat of Henry county.24 The Fall Creek circuit was organized in 1828, embracing the territory around Anderson, then called Andersontown. In the minutes of the Quarterly meeting for that circuit held in March, 1829, the following preaching places were given: Pendleton, Andersontown, Montgomery's, Carey's, Waddell's, Goe's, Smith's, Rector's, Bank's, Fuller's, Black's, Reddick's, Garrett's, Jordan's, Sargent's, Sibert's, Kirkendall's. The sum collected for the quarter was $16.61¼, and the amount paid Allen Wiley, the presiding elder, was $2.71, while Charles Bonner, the circuit preacher, received, $13.55¼.25

From these lists of preaching places we notice that the homes of the people are still, in the majority of cases, serving as preaching places. Even the Vincennes circuit eighteen years after its organization, had few meeting houses. To give an idea of how the new preachers were received on the early circuits, and how they made their preaching appointments, I will let Joseph Tarkington tell of his reception to the Patoka circuit, to which he was appointed in 1825, with James Garner as senior preacher: "The first place I came to on it (the circuit) was Archibald Campbell's, a mile from Petersburg. It was night and I called and asked to stay. Mrs. Campbell came to the door and said, 'No, we are all sick, with no one to put up your horse.' I told her I could put up my horse, and she said, 'Well, if you can wait on yourself and do without supper, you can stay.' And so I did. Mr. Campbell had a very high fever at the time, and turned to me, when I came in and set down my saddle-bags and said, 'You are traveling, sir?' I answered 'Yes.'" Mr. Campbell then asked where he was from, and when Tarkington replied that he was from Charlestown, Mr. Campbell asked if he knew who their preachers were, and on Tarkington's telling the name of the presiding elder, and the senior preacher, the host asked, "Well, who is the other one? We had two last year." Thereupon Tarkington replied that the bishop had sent him. Campbell then said, "Why, what can you do?" "Not much," Tarkington replied. "Well," said Campbell, "wife, give him some cornbread and cabbage to start on." Tarkington said, "I started on it after a fifty-mile ride that day." "The next day I went on giving out appointments for Mr. Garner, and that night got to O'Neal's, near the place of Major Robert O'Neal, who had sold out and was going to Sangamon county, Illinois. I preached there, and after the sermon, Major O'Neal said: 'I will be gone before Mr. Garner comes. Who of you will open your house for preaching?' All was silent for some time, and then Major Robb arose and said: 'Rather than have no preaching in the neighborhood, I will open my house. I have a large bar-room, and there are several sinners at my house. If you accept of what I have you are welcome.' So an appointment was given out for preaching at Major Robb's, in two weeks. The Major treated the preachers well all that year, and though he never made any profession of any religion yet all the female members of his family became religious."26

The session of the Illinois conference in 1826 met at Bloomington, Indiana, and in that year the Indiana circuits contained a membership of nearly eleven thousand. The third session of the conference met at Mt. Carmel, Illinois, in September, 1827; the fourth session of the conference met in Madison, Indiana; the fifth session in Edwardsville, Illinois; the sixth session in Vincennes; and the last session of the old Illinois conference was held in Indianapolis, October 4, 1831. During these years the circuits were spreading out rapidly to the northward, following the population as it expanded in that direction. In 1829 the Logansport Mission was organized with Stephen R. Beggs as the missionary. In 1830 the Indianapolis District appears with James Armstrong as the first presiding elder, which embraced Indianapolis, Franklin, Fall Creek, White Lick, Greencastle, Rockville, Crawfordsville and Logansport. This year also Ft. Wayne Mission was organized. By 1831 it was found expedient to organize another district, farther north and the Crawfordsville district was accordingly added. The work in Indiana was now included in five districts, the Madison, Charlestown, Indianapolis, Crawfordsville and Wabash. The charges lying in the north part of the state in this year were Greencastle, Crawfordsville, Lafayette, Pine Creek, Rockville, Logansport, South Bend and Ft. Wayne.

The period from 1825 to 1832 is noticeable for the changes and readjustments made in the size and location of circuits. The Conference of 1827 divided the old Whitewater circuit, and the northern part was called Wayne, and Stephen R. Beggs and William Evans were the first circuit preachers. Beggs was the first Methodist preacher to attempt to hold a two-days' meeting in the Quaker stronghold of Richmond, and so successful was the meeting that it gave the cause of Methodism great impetus there, so that now Methodists far outnumber the Quakers. The next year Beggs was sent to the Crawfordsville circuit, and during that year organized a class at Lafayette, consisting of twenty members. At this time the Crawfordsville circuit reached practically across the state. The main preaching places on this circuit were Crawfordsville, Fort Wayne, Logansport, Delphi, Lafayette, Attica, Portland, Covington and back to Crawfordsville once more. The subordinate and intermediate preaching places, however, outnumbered the principal ones, so that the preacher had to preach from five to seven times a week. The Portland here referred to was an old town located about halfway between Attica and Covington, and in the early days was an important trading center. The appointments on the Crawfordsville circuit were all on or near the Wabash river, which greatly facilitated the traveling of the circuit.

In the fall of 1829 Stephen R. Beggs was sent to organize a new circuit, which was known as the Logans's Port Mission, and included as the three main preaching places, Logansport, Delphi and Lafayette, with a number of intermediate places. These newer circuits were four weeks' circuits, that is, it took the preacher four weeks to make the complete round of the circuit, and these seem to have been the largest circuits at this period, though from ten to twenty years previous, six and even eight weeks' circuits were not uncommon. The usual size of the circuit at this time was two or three weeks.

It was during the twenties and early thirties that the name "Station" made its first appearance among the appointments in Indiana. It was in the list of appointments for 1825 that Madison station and Salem station appeared. A few years later Lawrenceburg and Indianapolis became stations, and by 1831 New Albany and Bloomington had been added to the number. Many of the old circuit preachers greatly opposed the doing away of the old circuit system, many of them maintaining that it was this system, more than anything else, that had been responsible for the great progress of Methodism on the frontier.\textsuperscript{31} But as the towns grew in population and wealth the demand of the membership in these larger places became more and more insistent for stationed preachers, and as time went on the number of stations greatly increased.

The founders of Methodism have been criticised for their lack of foresight in taking little or no thought for the accumulation of property for the church.\textsuperscript{32} In the early days excellent sites for church buildings might have been had for the asking in all the towns, yet most of the early meeting houses of the Methodist church were built in country districts, and they were built with little or no reference to the permanent centers of population. As a consequence, when towns began to develop many churches were found to be wrongly located, and as the country became older and the demand for Sabbath preaching compelled the discontinuance of week-day appointments, many of the older church buildings ceased to be occupied. They were built too close together for Sabbath appointments and yet it was always difficult, as at present, to unite the small country churches into a common center, for the erection of a larger church. Other denominations were erecting large church buildings, years before the Methodists were able to do so, and it is not an uncommon thing to find Methodist conferences sitting in Presbyterian and Baptist churches, although numerically the Methodists were the largest denomination in the state. The Methodists, however, began to make improvements in their church buildings, during the latter years of the old Illinois conference, and the old log churches began to give place to the plain brick or frame church, without steeples or bells.

As the population of Indiana crept northward, schemes for internal improvements began to be agitated, especially in the matter of road building. The earliest roads were state roads, and then came the National road. These improvements had their reaction on church development. The early circuits were so large and the settlements so scattered and remote from each other, that the improvements in the roads not only greatly benefited the preacher, but also the people who had to travel long distances to hear him. It is an interesting fact, although the reason for it is not definitely known, that preaching appointments were for 12 o’clock, on all days except the Sabbath. Perhaps the reason for this was that everybody could tell on a clear day when it was noon by the sun, for there were few clocks and fewer watches among the people.

By 1832 the Methodist membership in Indiana had grown to nearly 20,000, and during the twenties there had been a number of remarkable revivals in various places over the State. Probably the greatest numbers, which the preachers succeeded in winning to the church, were won as the result of camp-meetings, held during the spring and summer months. Almost every circuit had somewhere within its bounds a camp-meeting ground, and the camp-meeting occasion was the great occasion looked forward to by all on the circuit. It was about the only vacation enjoyed by the people of the frontier, and served a social as well as a religious purpose. The idea, often expressed, that early Methodist converts were won in meetings, held in close rooms, is absolutely untrue, for the greatest religious revivals were conducted out in the open air, and every convert, who fell prostrate on the straw, had his lungs filled with pure oxygen. In these camp-meetings very often strange and seemingly supernatural things happened. In the year 1831 a camp-meeting was held on the Wayne circuit, and during the meeting many were converted. Some of the converts would begin to laugh, and would continue doing so for hours. After the laughing commenced it seemed practically impossible to stop it.\textsuperscript{33} Opinion was so divided on the matter that the minister preached and advised concerning it, from the pulpit, suggesting that those who laughed “should not invite the exercise,” and those who scoffed “should not doubt the sincerity of their brethren, for they could not help seeing that the thing was involuntary when once commenced.” One man was almost thrown into the “jerks” of former days by resisting the laughing symptoms. It was told that a woman in Kentucky laughed all day and all night after she was converted.

Long protracted meetings held during the winter months, had not yet come into vogue, though the two day meetings were common. Such a meeting was held, as has been noted above, on the Wayne circuit in 1828, the preacher, Stephen R. Beggs, being assisted by the local preachers on the circuit. The meeting was held in the school house at Richmond, and created considerable excitement among the Quaker population, some of whom had never seen or heard Methodist preaching. There were six or seven converts, and some of them desired baptism; some chose pouring, others sprinkling and one asked to be immersed. Accordingly the congregation, with many curious onlookers, including a number of Quakers, went to the banks of Whitewater to see the sight. One man was so curious that he waded out into the water so that he might get a better view of the performance, and so intent was he that he made a misstep and with his little boy, whom he had carried out with him, he fell backwards into the stream. At this some of the onlookers shouted with laughter.\textsuperscript{34}

meeting preachers as John Strange and James B. Fin-ley, of Ohio, were present.

Of all the camp-meeting preachers in Indiana during these years, none were so popular as John Strange. One who often heard him preach states that "There never has been a man in Indiana who could move and stir an audience from center to circumference equal to him."^35 On one occasion when preaching on a Sabbath morning at a camp-meeting in Wayne county to a vast crowd, in the midst of his sermon he took one of his flights of eloquence, which raised a great shout from the congregation and lifted the people from their seats. Hearing the shouting the crowd on the outside of the meeting place rushed in and as they came pouring down the center aisle, Strange, raising on his toes and throwing himself a little back, with his right arm extended, pointing with his finger directly toward the young men coming in, screamed in a voice that made the forest ring, "Here they come now! My Lord! Shoot them as they come." And one of the young men who was among those coming in states that he sank down in the nearest seat, unable to move until the sermon was finished.

The eloquence of these pioneer preachers was not the kind learned in the schools from the study of books, and there is no better way to account for it than to let John Strange, this prince of circuit-riders and western orators, tell of the school in which he learned it. His Alma Mater, said he, was "Brush College, more ancient though less pretentious than Yale or Harvard or Princeton. Here I graduated and I love her memory still. Her academic groves are the boundless forests and prairies of these western wilds; her Pierian springs are the gushing fountains from rocks and mountain fastnesses; her Arcadian groves and Orphic songs are the wild woods, and the birds of every color and every song, relieved now and then with the bass hootings of the night owl and the weird treble of the nature and the mysteries of redemption; her library is plemented with trees and brooks, and stones, all of

In the sixteen years since Indiana had become a State many influences had been at work developing the new commonwealth from a pioneer district to a well organized and prosperous condition, and by 1832 it seemed expedient that Indiana should be set apart into a separate conference. There were nearly 20,000 Methodists within the State, and accordingly the General Conference of 1832 decided that it was for the best interest of both Indiana and Illinois Methodism to form a separate conference to include all the stations and circuits within the State of Indiana, and a strip of territory in the southern part of Michigan.
With the formation of the Indiana conference, Indiana Methodism begins a new and larger chapter in its history. In a sense the pioneer days are passed and the church is firmly established in the new commonwealth.

CHAPTER III.

THE OLD INDIANA CONFERENCE, 1832-1844.

If any single period in the history of Indiana Methodism stands out more conspicuously than any other, it is the period from 1832 to 1844, the years of the life of the old Indiana Conference. These are notable years because of the outstanding leadership; when such men as Allen Wiley, James Havens, Matthew Simpson and Edward R. Ames were in their prime. These were years also of conspicuous progress in the church throughout the State. When the Indiana Conference met for its first session it had a membership of thirty-nine preachers, five presiding elders' districts, and the church membership in the state numbered 19,853; in 1844, the year marking the close of the period, there were 206 preachers, sixteen districts and 67,118 members. For many, however, these years in the history of Indiana Methodism are rendered the more interesting because they mark the inception and the founding of Indiana Asbury University, now DePauw University. The old Indiana Conference and the founding of this next to the oldest living Methodist College in the old Northwest, are inseparably connected, and the history of both during these early years belong together.

The first session of the Indiana Conference met in New Albany on October 17, 1832, Bishop Joshua Soule presiding. Eighteen members were present at the first roll call, and responded to their names in the following order: Allen Wiley, Joseph Tarkington, John Kern, Daniel Anderson, Samuel C. Cooper, George Locke, James Havens, Asa Beck, Charles Bonner, John T. Johnson, William Shanks, C. W. Ruter, James Armstrong, William H. Smith, Enoch G. Wood, James Scott,

1 See Minutes for 1832.
Richard S. Robinson and Boyd Phelps. C. W. Ruter was elected secretary of the Conference, which position he held continuously until 1838, when ill health compelled him to give it up. The Conference convened on a Wednesday and adjourned on the following Monday morning. Among the items of important business transacted was the adoption of by-laws for the governing of the Conference, and these by-laws, with slight change, were continued in force throughout the twelve years of the life of the old Indiana Conference.

A collection was taken up for John Strange, whose health had recently given way, and like most Methodist preachers, he had little of this world's goods to tide him over such a crisis. This collection helped to purchase a house and lot in Indianapolis for him, where he died a few months later, December 2, 1832. It is doubtful if there has ever been a Methodist preacher in Indiana more universally loved than John Strange, and for years after his death his name is frequently found on the lips of those who admired and loved him, both among the ministry and laymen.

An interesting case which came before the Conference in 1832, was that of Alfred W. Arrington, who was reported by his presiding elder to have withdrawn from the church, "having become skeptical in his mind," but that since his withdrawal he had become thoroughly convinced of the truth of Christianity, and deeply deplored his fall, and now begged to be restored to his former standing in the church. A motion was made that he be restored, but it was lost; the next day the motion was reconsidered and he was restored to the church. Arrington was a young preacher of great promise, and was reputed to have been one of the most eloquent of the young preachers in the State, but as one of the old preachers observed, his head had become dizzy through flattery, and he soon fell again, and finally he left the ministry and went to Arkansas where he became a successful lawyer.

One of the things which continually strikes a reader's notice, as he goes through the minutes for these years, is the large number of men who are refused admittance to the Conference. The journal records the names of those admitted, and then states that so-and-so were not admitted, giving no reason, however, for the action, though the statement generally follows that the presiding elders have leave to employ them if they think it necessary. One of the chief reasons for the refusal of the Conference to accept preachers was because they were married. It was a rule of the church, "as inexorable as death," that no man, no matter what his age or circumstances, should marry until he had traveled four years. This rule was doubtless a wise one when it was adopted, but when the extreme frontier conditions had passed, as was true in Indiana by 1832, the enforcement of the rule led to both injustice to candidates for the ministry and a great loss to the church itself.

Another rule of the church which made marriage for the young itinerant very difficult, and romantic love affairs next to impossible, was the rule which required the unmarried minister to consult his brethren on the subject, before he was to mention love or marriage to the young lady of his choice. "The rule did not say what brethren were to be consulted, but the presiding elder always assumed that they were ex-officio entitled to be consulted." Strange as it may seem to us in these days every circuit seemed to have somewhere in its bounds a "pious young sister, every way qualified to become a first-class wife for a preacher;" and willing to endure all the hardships of the itinerancy if they might providentially be called to it." To make the situation more embarrassing to the young preacher, he had no home on the circuit except where his saddle-bags happened to be, and frequently he was compelled to stay at the home of one of these self-sacrificing young sisters, and often perhaps her home was the only stopping place for that appointment, and thus he was brought face to face with her once every four weeks. "Common politeness required him to be courteous to all, and the instincts of a gentleman would lead him to be respectful to the grown daughter, who never failed to be in her best attire and on her best behavior during his stay, and often at the expense to him of many an hour that he ought to have spent with Watson’s Institutes or Wesley’s Sermons, whether he preferred it or not."

In one such home in the early thirties was an accomplished daughter who had favorably impressed three young preachers, and each determined to take the first opportunity of consulting the presiding elder on the subject of matrimony. Accordingly all three went to a camp-meeting, which was held near the center of the district, in which they all had circuits. Neither knew why the others were there. One obtained an early interview. He began by telling the elder that his four years of celibacy was about up, and that he had been making the matter of marriage a subject of prayer, and the Lord had indicated to him that he ought to marry. The elder inquired who was the happy girl, and received the reply, "Cora ———." "A splendid girl," said the elder, "and will make any man a good wife." And soon the young preacher was on his faithful horse speeding to Cora’s home to begin his courtship.

Soon after this young preacher number two drew the presiding elder to one side and made practically the same speech and received the same reply and the same indorsement of Cora. Later in the same day preacher number three had a hearing, making a similar speech, and winding up as the others had done with Cora. To him, however, the presiding elder replied: "Now see here, my young brother, there must be some mistake somewhere. Cora —— is a splendid girl: but you are the third man who has today said the Lord had indicated her for a wife. Somebody must have misunderstood the Lord.”

Two other items of business transacted by the conference of 1832 are of importance. On the first day of the conference a committee was appointed, consisting of Allen Wiley, C. W. Ruter and James Armstrong, to consider the propriety of establishing a literary institution under the patronage of the Conference. The committee presented their report, recommending that the conference establish such an institution, and that the presiding elders collect all the information possible as to possible sites and means of raising money. The journal also records two bequests which had been made to the Methodist Episcopal church in Indiana, one by Col. James Paxton and the other by Isaac Swearingin, and Allen Wiley and James Armstrong were appointed agents to receive the bequests for the conference. This was the beginning of the Preacher’s Aid Society, of the Indiana Conference, though the society was not formally organized until 1834.

When the appointments were read at the close of the first session of the Indiana Conference, the State was divided into five districts, Madison, presided over by James Havens; Charlestown district, William Shanks, presiding elder; Indianapolis district had for its elder, Allen Wiley; James L. Thompson was appointed to the Vincennes district and James Armstrong was given a missionary district. There were sixty preachers appointed to some forty charges. The missionary district included Upper Wabash mission, St. Joseph and South Bend mission, Kalamazoo mission, Fort Wayne mission and LaPorte mission.4

siding. An increase of membership was reported of 3,582, giving a total membership for the state of 23,617. Resolutions were adopted favoring the establishment of a periodical at Cincinnati, and the next year the Western Christian Advocate began its honorable career at Cincinnati, with Charles Eliott as the first editor. The missionary district was this year called the Northwestern district, over which James Armstrong again presided. The third session of the conference met at Centerville, on October 22, 1834, Bishop Roberts presiding. This year two new districts were added, the Crawfordsville and the LaPorte districts, making seven in all, and an increase of 1,684 members reported. This year the death of three of the veteran preachers was reported, George Locke, James Armstrong and Nehemiah Griffith, all of whom had done valiant service for the church.

In 1835 the conference met at Lafayette, Bishop Roberts again presiding. The increase in membership for the year was only 263, but as the whole church went behind near 2,000 this year the gain in Indiana was creditable. At this conference, General conference delegates were elected in the following order, C. W. Ruter, Allen Wiley, James Havens and J. L. Thompson, with Aaron Wood and William Shanks as reserve delegates. The next year, 1836, the conference met in Indianapolis, and Allen Wiley, until the arrival of Bishop Roberts, was elected president, pro tempore. This year there was an increase of 2,616, and a class of twenty-four was admitted on trial into the conference. A new district was added which was named the Centerville, making eight districts in all, the new district being located in the northeastern section of the State. Among the leading questions discussed at this conference was the location, organization and endowment of the new university, which the Conference had determined to establish.

No sooner had Indiana been set apart as a separate conference, than there began to be an agitation for the establishment of an institution of learning under the control of the Methodist Episcopal church. On the first day of the first session of the Indiana Conference, which met in New Albany, in October, 1832, a committee consisting of Allen Wiley, C. W. Ruter and James Armstrong was appointed to consider and report on the advisability of establishing such an institution. In their report they state, "We therefore think that seminaries and colleges under good literary and moral regulations are of incalculable benefit to our country, and that a good conference seminary would be of great and growing utility to our people." They further state "When we examine the state of the literary institutions of our country, we find a majority of them are in the hands of other denominations (whether rightfully or otherwise, we do not take it upon ourselves to determine)—whose doctrine in many respects we consider incompatible with the doctrines of revelation, so that our people are unwilling (and we think properly so) to send their sons to those institutions. Therefore we think it very desirable to have an institution under our own control from which we can exclude all doctrines which we deem dangerous; though at the same time we do not wish to make it so sectarian as to exclude or in the smallest degree repel the sons of our fellow citizens from the same."

The committee closed their report by recommending that the presiding elders of the various districts be "required to collect all the information in their power in reference to an eligible site, and the means to build, and present the same to the next conference." At the session of the conference in 1833, just before the close of the session, a committee was again appointed to "make inquiries relative to the establishment of a conference seminary," and on this committee were appointed A. Wiley, James Armstrong, James Havens, James L. Thompson and William Shanks.10

Although it was felt by many members of the conference that it was desirable to have a college in the State under the control of the Methodist church, yet it was thought if the Methodist church could receive an equitable share of privileges in the State University at Bloomington, that it would be better, at least for several years, for the church to actively support that institution, rather than found one of its own.11 Accordingly it was resolved, at the session of the Conference in 1834 to petition the State Legislature on the subject, and a form of a memorial was prepared by a committee of the conference. In the memorial it is stated, "We would impress it upon your honorable body that literature belongs to no one denomination of persons, and that no one exclusively, should be allowed to possess the keys that unlock her treasures. We apprehend that the funds of our State College were designed by their munificent donors to patronize science and advocate the cause of general literature and not of religious sects, and should it be divested from its original design (directly or indirectly) the donors are despoiled of a rich inheritance, and the legacy itself betrayed to a very questionable purpose. . . . We look in its charter (State College) and read that the places of president, professors and tutors are open, soliciting capacity to occupy them without regard to religious professions or doctrines. We then turn our eyes on the faculty from the organization of the Institution up to this hour and we see one common hue, one common religion characterize every member, as if capacity and fitness were combined to one church and one set of religious opinions." The memorial did not ask that the State College be put either in whole or in part under the control of the Methodist Church but they simply asked that the trustees of the college be elected for a definite term of years and that vacancies, as they occurred, should be filled by the Legislature and not by the remaining members of the board of trustees, as had been the custom heretofore.¹²

This memorial was signed by the members of the Conference, and six other similar memorials were presented to the state Legislature numerously signed, all of which were referred to the committee on education, but for some reason the committee never took any action in reference to them.¹³

The three oldest institutions of higher learning, founded in Indiana, with the exception of the old University of Vincennes, were Hanover and Franklin Colleges, and Indiana University. The University of Vincennes had been founded in 1806 and the national government had endowed it with a township of land, but its life was never vigorous, and it soon died and its endowment was taken for the present State University. The State University began its career in 1820 as a State Seminary, and it received in 1822 the endowment belonging to the Vincennes University. In 1828 it became Indiana College, and in 1838 Indiana College became Indiana University. The Baptists in 1834 began an agitation for a college under their control, and the next year, 1835, Franklin College was founded. The Presbyterians of Salem Presbytery, as early as 1825 were talking of founding a school, and in 1826 the Presbytery arranged with a certain John Finley Crow, who had been conducting a boarding school at South Hanover to enlarge his school into a classical school, and this was opened in 1827.¹⁴

For a number of years previous to the founding of Indiana Asbury University the Methodists had complained that the State College was under the control of the Presbyterian church. This was not alone true of the State College in Indiana but of Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, and the same accusation was also lodged against the State University of Kentucky. The Methodists considered the Presbyterians as extremely arrogant, assuming themselves to be the "only competent educators of the people," and as a result of the Presbyterian control of the State colleges in the West, but few young men from Calvinistic families were enrolled as students in the State Institutions. 15 The Methodists had four chief complaints against the Indiana State College: (1) The Institution was regarded as belonging to the Presbyterian Church, and was listed among Presbyterian colleges. (2) The religious beliefs of Methodist students were not respected. (3) Efforts were made to convince the public that none but Presbyterians were competent to teach in higher institutions of learning; and (4) Under the existing system no Methodist could be represented on the board of trustees, although the Methodists were the most numerous religious sect in the State. 16

One writer in the Western Christian Advocate, in 1835, signing himself "Indiana Itinerant," urges the establishment of a Methodist Seminary, as Hanover had already been started under Presbyterian auspices, and the State College was alleged to be under Presbyterian influence. 17 Another article later in the same year pleads for the starting of a Methodist College in Indiana. This writer says that there are many Methodist parents who would prefer to have their children educated under Methodist influence, but are compelled to send them to Bloomington or Hanover both of which are under Presbyterian influence. He, however, wants it distinctly understood that he does not favor a Theological Seminary. At this period the opposition to Theological Seminaries among Methodists was strong, even the editor of the Western Christian Advocate opposing their establishment in an editorial in which he points out that they are still in the experimental stage, that they would be dangerous to unanimity of opinion, and he also argues that literary institutions are enough, and that the tendency of Theological Seminaries would be to localize the itineracy. The first committee on education appointed by the Indiana Conference in 1832, embodied in their report this statement, in regard to Theological Seminaries: "We are aware that when a Conference Seminary is named some of our preachers and many of our people suppose we are about to establish a manufactory in which preachers are to be made. But nothing is farther from our views, for we are fully of Mr. Berneges' opinion, who, when comparing ministers to pens, observes that although the Seminaries have been trying to make pens for hundreds of years, they will not write until God nibs them."

Failing in their efforts to secure a reform in the manner of controlling the State University, the conference turned their thoughts earnestly toward the establishment of a literary institution. Accordingly at the session of the Conference in 1835 which met at Lafayette a plan was agreed upon for the founding of a university. The committee on education reported an elaborate plan for raising money, creating a capital stock of an indefinite number of shares of $100 each, any person holding one share of stock having the privilege of sending one student for six years to the university. The sum of $10,000 was to endow a professorship, and the preachers and especially the presiding elders were to act as agents to get the plan started. Also provision was made for finding a suitable location.

for the university, the plan being to start a competition between two or more towns in bidding for the Institution.\textsuperscript{21} When the conference of 1836 convened representatives from several competing towns were present, Rockville, Putnamville, Greencastle, Lafayette, Madison and Indianapolis being the principal competitors. Rockville presented a subscription of $20,000, Putnamville about the same; Indianapolis and Madison, $10,000; Greencastle, $25,000.\textsuperscript{22} Calvin Fletcher, representing Indianapolis, did not labor hard for the Institution, saying that it was not good for boys to be away from home in as large a place as Indianapolis would be some day. General Howard represented Rockville, and in his speech admitted that there were some chills and fever at Rockville, whereupon Mr. Fletcher admitted that some even died at Indianapolis, but Dr. Cowgill, representing Greencastle, said, "People never die at Greencastle, although for convenience they have a cemetery there."\textsuperscript{23} Two ballots were all that was needed to determine that Greencastle should be the seat of the Indiana Asbury University, the name of the University having been decided by the Conference at their session in 1835.

Greencastle at that time contained a population of about five hundred, the town having been laid out about ten years previous. It was therefore very new and very rough in appearance. The streets were without grading or sidewalks, except about the public square, and mud was a very abundant article for at least six months in the year. It was exceedingly fortunate for Greencastle that it secured the location of the college, for had it failed, the county seat would probably have been moved to Putnamville, and the influence given to the town by the University made it a point on the Indianapolis and Terre Haute Railroad and later gained for it also the New Albany and Michigan City Railroad.

The Conference then appointed a committee to draft a charter to be submitted to the Legislature at its next session, which was done, and the charter was passed substantially as drawn up by the committee. The following original board of trustees was then elected: Robert R. Roberts, John Cowgill, A. C. Stevenson, W. H. Thornburg, William Talbott, Rees Hardesty, Joseph Crow, John W. Osborn, Thomas Robinson, Hiram E. Talbott, James Montgomery, Daniel Sigler, Isaac Matkins, T. W. Fletcher, Gamaliel Taylor, Martin M. Ray, Isaac C. Elston, S. S. Leanard, W. W. Hitt, James A. Wright, T. A. Howard and Jacob Hass.

The first meeting of the board of trustees was held on the first Monday of March, 1837, at which it was decided to open a preparatory department as soon as a suitable teacher could be secured. Later Rev. Cyrus Nutt, a graduate of Alleghany College, was elected principal of the preparatory department at a salary of $400.00 In due time the new principal arrived, and on the 5th of June, 1837, the school was opened in a room in the old town seminary building. Five pupils, barefooted and without coats, appeared—O. Badger, O. H. P. Ash, William Stevenson, Osborn and S. Taylor, all of whom resided in Greencastle except Badger.24

On the 20th of June was the day appointed for the laying of the corner-stone of the college building. The little town was full of people, who had come from far and near, to witness the impressive ceremonies. At 9 a. m. a sermon was preached in the Methodist Church by Rev. Hooper Crews of Illinois. At 11 o'clock a procession was formed and they proceeded to the site of the University where a speech was made over the corner-stone by Calvin Fletcher, Esq., of Indianapolis.

24 Western Christian Advocate, February 17, 1858.
This speech was heard by few, for it was delivered in a low voice. The procession then proceeded to a grove on the southwest border of the town where seats and platform had been erected for the occasion. On the platform were Rev. Alien Wiley, James Havens, C. W. Ruter, and E. R. Ames, and a few other of the leading ministers of the conference. Prayer was offered by Rev. E. R. Ames, after which Rev. H. B. Bascom, reputed to be one of the greatest orators of the west, gave an address, which lasted two hours. The day was very chilly, and Dr. Bascom asked to speak with his hat on. During an interlude some rain and a little snow fell, and the speaker sat down a few minutes and while he was seated a Hoosier who had provided himself with a roll of ginger bread, stepped up behind the speaker's stand and pulling Dr. Bascom by the coat, broke off a piece of his ginger loaf and offered it to him, saying, "Mister, as you have been speaking hard, you must be hungry, here take a piece." Dr. Bascom thanked him kindly, but refused the refreshment, saying he had no occasion.\(^{25}\)

The college proper was organized in September, 1837, and the Trustees elected Rev. Cyrus Nutt, Professor of Languages, and Acting President. In the spring of 1838 Rev. J. W. Weakley was appointed Preceptor of the Preparatory department. Rev. Matthew Simpson was elected President in 1839, and he arrived and took charge in May of that year. The first catalogue was published at the close of that term and the number of students recorded there is 140. In the fall of 1840 the first commencement was held and President Simpson was inaugurated.\(^{26}\) The charge to the President was delivered by Governor Wallace, and the President delivered an inaugural address. building was completed and the college was safely launched upon its long and useful career. The first graduates were John Wheeler of Bellefontaine, Ohio; T. A. Goodwin of Brookville, Indiana, and James Maddox of Crawfordsville. In 1841 W. C. Larrabee was elected to the chair of Mathematics and Natural Science, and there are no two names in the history of Education in Indiana more important than Cyrus Nutt and W. C. Larrabee.

Cyrus Nutt remained a Professor in Indiana Asbury University until 1843 when he resigned and took an appointment in the Indiana conference and was stationed at Bloomington. In the fall of 1848 he returned to the University but the next year he was elected to the presidency of Fort Wayne Female College, where he remained but one year, going from that institution to the presidency of Whitewater College at Centerville. In this position he remained for a number of years when he again entered the ministry, serving as Presiding Elder of the Richmond district. Again in 1857 he returned to Indiana Asbury University, this time serving as Professor of Mathematics; he was elected also Vice-President and for nearly two years he was the acting president.\textsuperscript{27} In 1860 he was elected President of the Indiana State University and was inaugurated on June 7, 1861, the great war Governor, Oliver P. Morton, making the address of investiture. He served as President of the State University for fifteen years, resigning in 1875.\textsuperscript{28} It is extremely interesting that Cyrus Nutt, the first member of the faculty of Indiana Asbury University and a Methodist preacher, should serve as President of the State University during the years of the Civil War.

W. C. Larrabee was a native of Maine, and a graduate of Bowdoin College in the class of 1828, and when Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., was opened he was appointed tutor and was the first actual teacher in that honorable institution. In 1840 Dr. Larrabee was a delegate to the General Conference, which met at Baltimore, and there he met Dr. Simpson, then president of Indiana Asbury University, and as a result of this acquaintance he was elected to the Chair of Mathematics and Natural Science in the new University. Dr. Larrabee remained at Indiana Asbury University until 1852, when he was elected superintendent of public instruction, and was the first the state ever had, and while in that office he laid the foundation for Indiana's present school system.29

The year 1836 had been one of great prosperity in Indiana, as far as the Church was concerned. There was an increase of 2,616 members during the year, and the circuits reported great increase in the interest of the people in religious matters. The preacher on the Vevay circuit writes: 'The Lord of the harvest hath begun to revive His work on Vevay circuit. The last two rounds on the circuit I have taken into the Church thirty-four members and my colleague has taken in several, and we have had a good many hopeful conversions. The membership are waking up from their long sleep and are trimming their lamps.'30 The preacher on the Bedford circuit reports 129 received into the Church from that circuit.31 Richard Hargrave reported from Fort Wayne, "The cause is marching forward through much opposition in this far Northwest,"32 while the minister from the Noblesville circuit writes that when he came to the circuit in October, 1835, there were twelve preaching places and not a meeting house on the circuit, but that during the year money had been raised for the building of a meeting house at Noblesville, which was to cost $700, and that there had been an increase of 103 members on the circuit.\textsuperscript{33} During this year Elkhart circuit was organized with the following preaching places: Elkhart, Conley’s, Warner’s, Shelby’s, Goshen, Gornell’s, Elkhart Prairie, Woods’, Hawpatch, Burton’s, Little Elkhart, Shady Creek, Cross' and White Plains.\textsuperscript{34} Successful camp-meetings were numerous during the year, on many of the circuits. On the Danville circuit 113 joined the Church as the result of a camp-meeting and another successful camp-meeting added 84 to the Church on the Paris circuit.\textsuperscript{35} William M. Dailey, writing from the Bloomington station in the midst of a revival meeting, says, “A considerable number have been added to the Church, but the crowning feature of this meeting is the number of clear and powerful conversions. * * * The Lord is at work, sinners are shaken, the trembling throne of infidelity is falling, saints are on the wing and children are born to God. Hallelujah, Amen!”\textsuperscript{36} At a camp-meeting held near Indianapolis during the early fall of this year, a desperate character by the name of David Buckhart attempted to breakup the meeting, but James Havens, the Presiding Elder, who was on the ground, conquered the hoodlum, after a desperate struggle, and he was confined in the county jail. As Buckhart entered the jail door, he was heard to say, “Has it come to this, that David Buckhart has been whipped by a Methodist preacher.”\textsuperscript{37}

Two resolutions passed by the Indiana conference during the thirties, bearing on the liquor and tobacco questions, are of interest. In 1835 a resolution was adopted requesting the General Conference at its next session to restore to the discipline Mr. Wesley's original rule on the subject of ardent spirits. This rule prohibits “drunkenness, buying or selling of spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity.” For some reason this rule had early been abandoned by the Methodist Church in America, and at this time only ministers were forbidden the buying or selling of liquors, members being permitted its sale, provided they permitted no disorderly conduct on their premises. It was not an uncommon thing for Methodists, in good standing, to run distilleries and deal in liquor. On one occasion Joseph Tarkington was conducting a “speaking meeting” on the Centerville circuit, “when a well-to-do Methodist farmer and distiller arose to speak. He began by saying, ‘I have been governed by two spirits; one is the good-spirit, that prompts me to be good and to do good. The other is—.’ Here Tarkington called out ‘Whiskey!’ at the top of his voice. ‘No,’ said the distiller, who was then quite under the influence of his home-made goods, as he often was, ‘No; nobody ever saw me drunk.’ ‘Some people never get drunk—it always stands up in them,’ replied Tarkington, and the half drunken Methodist distiller took his seat.” This rude treatment evidently was the thing the Methodist whiskey dealer needed, for within six months he abandoned his distillery, and became a total abstainer. Dram drinking was not uncommon among the preachers themselves, though it had been much more practiced in previous years than it was in the thirties and forties. Peter Cartwright, in his account of his trip to the General Conference of 1824, held in Baltimore, in the company of Jesse Walker, Samuel Thompson and a certain F. S., says that at every stop F. S. and Walker called for spirits.

38 Minutes of Indiana Conference, 1835. The Ohio Conference passed a similar resolution at their session in 1835.
39 Western Christian Advocate, September 18, 1835.
Cartwright and Thompson protested, but the other two preachers defended the practice, whereupon Cartwright and Thompson threatened to quit their company if they did not stop using liquor for this time at least.41

In the early pioneer days the drinking of whiskey “in family and social circles was considered harmless and allowable sociabilities. It was almost universally the custom for preachers, in common with others, to take drams, and if a man would not have it in his family, his harvest, his house raisings, log rollings, weddings and so on, he was considered parsimonious and unsociable; and many, even professors of christianity, would not help a man if he did not have spirits and treat the company.”42 About 1825, however, a great temperance movement began, and agitation in favor of temperance spread all over the country. In 1835 a National Temperance convention was held, and the various states held state temperance conventions, in all of which the Methodists were active, and as a result of the movement several states adopted prohibition laws, and the drinking of liquor became much less common than before.43

The Indiana conference at its session in 1836 passed a resolution “that during the session of this conference none of its members is to use tobacco or defile the floor by spitting, and every brother is particularly requested to avoid it.” From the text of this resolution we may infer that tobacco using, particularly the chewing of tobacco, was common among the preachers. The Western Christian Advocate, in one of its issues in 1835, prints a clipping from another religious paper, in which the writer protests against tobacco spitting ministers, and gives as an instance, one young preacher who "spat as often as once in two minutes during his whole sermon, so that the pulpit floor was as filthy as a stable when he finished his discourse."

The sixth session of the Indiana Conference met at New Albany on October 27, 1837, with Bishop Soule as the presiding officer. The reports of the preachers from their circuits showed a gain of 3,140 in the membership, making the total for the conference of 31,058; and 116 preachers received appointments. This year there were four agents appointed for Indiana Asbury University, William Shanks, S. C. Cooper, William M. Dailey and John A. Brouse, the first agents, John C. Smith and Aaron Wood, having been appointed the year previous. At this session of the conference one man was refused admittance on the ground of his poor family government and the deficient moral education of his children. At this session John Ray and S. L. Robinson were reported to have died during the year. John Ray was born in Virginia, in 1768, and began preaching in Kentucky in 1790, but marrying soon afterwards, he located, as most of the early frontier Methodist preachers did, when they married. In 1819 he re-entered the ministry in Kentucky and served circuits there until he was superannuated, when he was transferred to the Indiana conference, in order to be near his son, Edwin Ray. John Ray was always much interested in the negroes and was a strong anti-slavery advocate, and the last act of his life was to give $50.00 to the American Colonization Society, and $50.00 for the redemption of James Thompson, a slave, who understood the Wyandotte tongue and who had been acting as an interpreter in the Methodist Wyandotte mission. The Western Christian Advocate urged his purchase, in order to prevent his sale, and this was finally accomplished for $1,200.48

To the conference in New Albany, in 1837, most of the preachers from the eastern part of the state came by way of the Ohio river, and many of them returned the same way. After the close of the conference some forty or fifty preachers, and among them Bishop Soule, were passengers on board the mail boat, the General Pike, running between Louisville and Cincinnati. On board the boat also was a large company of gamblers, returning from the Louisville races, which had just closed, and they soon took possession of the gentlemen's cabin, which was soon lined with card tables, and liquor began to flow in abundance. The scene was too much for Bishop Soule, and he rose from his seat and walked about in an excited manner surveying the scene, and in the midst of the bacchanalian songs and coarse jests, he called upon the preachers to gather in a group, and they began to sing:

"Jesus, the name high over all,
In hell, or earth, or sky;
Angels and men before it fall,
And devils fear and fly."

This soon proved to be the correct remedy for the situation, for by the time the Methodist preachers had sung several hymns, the astonished gamblers had all retired from their card tables, to the decks and state rooms, and the remainder of the journey was spent in quietness.49

The seventh session of the Indiana conference convened at Rockville, on October 17, 1838, and the largest gain in membership yet recorded, was reported, 4,220, and also the greatest number was received on trial into the conference, 32. This year a new district appears in the minutes, the Logansport, over which George M. Beswick was appointed Presiding Elder. The district included the following appointments, Logansport, Monticello, Independence, Delphi, Peru, Fort Wayne, Warsaw mission and Rochester mission. At this session of the conference the preachers along the Ohio river had to travel across the state on horse back. Enoch G. Wood and F. C. Holliday made the journey from Indianapolis together. They started from Indianapolis on Saturday morning and arrived in Danville for dinner. Here Wood was taken sick, and they were compelled to remain until Monday, and Holliday improved the Sabbath by preaching twice in the court house. They resumed their journey on Monday, and reached Greenscastle in time for dinner. Monday night they stayed at a double log-cabin, and during the night there was a tremendous racket in the yard, the master of the cabin and his dog engaged in fighting some wild animal, but the preachers were so tired with their travel, they did not arise to assist in the fight. In the morning the farmer informed them that a bear had gotten into his hog pen and was attempting to carry off a hog, and he had succeeded in saving the hogs, but the bear had escaped. The preachers were sorry they had not been called to his assistance, as the capture of a bear on the way to conference would have been a romantic incident, and would have made a good story to relate to their brethren.

The year had been a fruitful one of ingathering, and many conversions and accessions were reported from all over the state. Joseph Tarkington, that year, the preacher at Lawrenceburg station, received some two hundred into the Church, among them being some of the best people of the town. Ninety-eight were baptised in the church and twenty-eight in the Ohio river, those being baptised in the river, were of course immersed. On the Kalamazoo circuit two protracted meetings were held during the winter, and resulted in not only adding a number of members to the circuit, but in raising a subscription of $1,000 for the building of a meeting house. At Shelbyville, Danville, Rising Sun, Elkhart, Rushville, Pine Creek, Lagrange, New Albany, and on many other circuits successful revivals were conducted, resulting in the bringing of many new members into the Church. Allen Wiley, the Presiding Elder of the Crawfordsville district in 1837-38, reports that his district contains 4,000 square miles, that it includes ten “city towns” three of which contain a population of 2,000, and that in this territory there are 60,000 inhabitants, 3,000 church members, and 12,000 people who attend Church, but are not members. He complains that there are no places large enough to accommodate the crowds who come to the Church services, which he says is due to the newness of the country.

The conference which met in Lawrenceburg in 1839 was a very interesting and important meeting. In the first place there were three bishops present, Bishops Roberts and Soules being visitors and Bishop Morris the president of the conference. There were thirty-one preachers received on trial, and twenty-one received into full connection, and an increase of 8,694 members was reported for the conference. It was also the year in which General Conference delegates were elected, and Allen Wiley, E. R. Ames, C. W. Ruter, A. Eddy, and A. Wood were duly elected to represent the conference.

The preachers with few exceptions, came to the conference clothed in home-spun, and all of them except a few who lived along the Ohio river came to the conference on horse back, and most of them were seedy when they arrived. "Many had come from a month's tussle with the ague, and some of them kept up the shake habit every other day during conference." During the latter part of the conference session a resolution was introduced requesting that the preachers return to the original plainness of dress, and that they be requested to wear either the round breasted or plain frock coats. The reason for this resolution, was the fact that John S. Bayless having married a well-to-do woman of Vincennes, had come to conference wearing his wedding suit, which was tailor made and in the height of fashion; the pants tight with narrow falls; the coat was "pigeon tailed" and the hat a stove-pipe, the whole giving the wearer a unique appearance in a Methodist conference of that period in Indiana. But more and more after this conference the preachers dressed as they pleased, though this motion was passed without a dissenting vote, and a few years later a similar resolution was introduced, and passed.

One of the important parts of a Methodist conference's business is the examination of character. Not only were those just entering the conference examined, in this regard, but each year the characters of every member of the conference had to be "passed." Especially were those, who were up for admission into full connection, given a careful examination. One case which came before the conference of 1839 was especially interesting. The young man under consideration was William J. Forbes, who was just closing his second year as a probationer, and therefore if he was found deserving he might be admitted. The committee on his studies gave a very complimentary report. He was good on everything, and very good on several. Finally the Presiding Elder, under whom he had been traveling, reported that this young man was a very good preacher, and the people liked to hear him. He also reported that he read a great deal and understood what he read, but he said, no one is converted under his preaching. At this juncture up jumped James Havens, and asked, "Does he make anybody mad?" To this the Elder replied, "O no! He is a sweet tempered man, everybody loves him." "Then I'm opposed to him," said Havens. "A man under whose preaching nobody is converted and nobody made mad is not fit for a Methodist preacher." In spite, however, of James Havens' opposition Forbes was admitted, for, said the Bishop, "A young man that reads a great deal and understands what he reads and preaches well, and that everybody loves, is a safe case."

In this early day a college education was an actual disadvantage to a preacher, as far as gaining advancement was concerned. Thomas A. Goodwin was the first preacher to enter the conference with a college diploma. The presiding elders were afraid of showing too much favor to a college man, and on a number of occasions Goodwin was actually demoted for no other reason than that he was a college graduate. One of Goodwin's colleagues was a man very deficient in education, but was much more popular on the circuit, "chiefly because he could outshout me." "He got all the socks, but he generously divided with me, for he got more than twice as many as he could possibly wear out. He would put up for the night or for a week, as the demands of the appointments would allow, and smoke his pipe, and talk gossip, but read, never, beyond the Western Christian Advocate. I met his praise everywhere I went. He kissed all the babies and had several namesakes before the year was half out.” This situation, and the jealousy and prejudice against college graduates finally drove Thomas A. Goodwin out of the regular ministry of the Methodist Church, and he became an editor of a newspaper, the chief policy of which was to fight the saloon and slavery.57

One of the most notable events of the session of 1839 was the first appearance of Dr. Matthew Simpson, the young president of Indiana Asbury University. At the time he was a young man, less than thirty years of age, and his personal appearance was not very prepossessing. He was clothed in neat, well-fitting jeans, although a number of others wore store clothes, and his dress and appearance was disappointing to the conference. The opportunity, however, for him to distinguish himself as a preacher, came when he was appointed to preach the anniversary sermon before the conference. This was the year that marked the centenary of Methodism, the first Methodist classes having been organized by John Wesley, in London in the year 1739. When the time came for the anniversary sermon, the house was crowded. The preacher took for his text the vision of Ezekiel, in which the prophet sees the waters flowing from the sanctuary. It was a sermon which described the triumph of the gospel, a theme which naturally greatly appealed to a Methodist conference, and which gave President Simpson opportunity of bringing into play his remarkable descriptive powers, and his rich imagination. The effect of that sermon was most impressive. Many preachers were overcome with emotion, and at one of the “climaxes,” an intelligent lady, not usually excitable, jumped to her feet, waving her parasol, and looking upward exclaimed, “Sun, stand thou still, and let the moon pass by,” repeating the sentence until some one started to sing, while her immediate friends took her out of the congregation."^8 After this Dr. Simpson was voted the prince of preachers, and to the day of his death Indiana Methodism never reversed that opinion.

The reading of the appointments in these early days was a time of intense excitement for the preachers; the preachers had no inkling, in those days, as they have in these, as to where they were to be sent, and to move then meant much more than it does now. We will let one who was an eye witness describe the reading of the appointments at the session of 1839. "Many of the preachers had bidden good-bye to their entertainers, and their horses, after a week’s rest, were saddled and at the door ready to make a few miles homeward that day. A presiding elder stood in each aisle of the church, and the order was announced by the bishop that when the name of a circuit was announced there would be a pause, and the preacher for the preceding year should stand up, and the presiding elder nearest to him would go to him and receive from him the "plan of the circuit." This occupied usually less than a minute, but to the conference it seemed an age. Not a word was spoken until this part was completed. The preacher stood up as directed, and the Presiding Elder went to him; but not until the Bishop saw that the "plan" was handed over, would he break silence. Then followed the name of the new preacher. It was usually a disappointment. Naturally enough he hoped it would not be a long move, the quality of the circuit being secondary; for there was not so much difference in quality as might be supposed, as none were easy."^9

While the appointments were being slowly read at this session of the conference James V. Watson, who had been on the superannuated roll the year previous, sat listening with intense anxiety for his appointment. He had hoped to be sent to Lawrenceburg, for he had assisted in a series of meetings there, and had many friends in the charge who desired that he be their preacher. But Madison district was read and Lawrenceburg had another preacher, and the bishop read on and on. Finally all the Indiana districts had been read and the bishop announced the Michigan district, and among the first appointments read in that district was "White Pigeon, James V. Watson." Watson sprang to his feet and with a great display of excitement exclaimed, "Where is White Pigeon? Can any one tell me where White Pigeon is?" "You will find it in Michigan, Brother Watson," coolly answered the Bishop. Finally after the conference was over William W. Hibben and S. C. Cooper took him by the arms, one on each side, and as they walked up the street Cooper told what a beauty of a place White Pigeon was, and that they had a fine brick church with a basement, and that the people would drive ten miles in their sleighs to hear him preach. And with such encouragement Watson's discouragement and rebellion passed and he said, "I will go: I will start tomorrow morning. Hurrah for White Pigeon." And he went to White Pigeon, and "he wrote his name in letters of immortal memory all over the great northwest." For after serving White Pigeon he became pastor at Detroit and other important cities, and finally became the first editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate. "Who shall say that, after all, the hand of the Lord was not in that cruel move."

When the preachers came to the conference in October, 1840, at Indianapolis, there were 153 traveling preachers, 418 local preachers, and 52,626 commun...
cants, an increase of 9,116 over the previous year. The year had been one of prosperity for the church, for the spirit of revival had continued throughout the year. On the Newton circuit more than three hundred joined the Church; Rockport reported a similar number of accessions, and a great “sweeping revival.” J. B. Birt on the Mooresville circuit received four hundred members on probation and by letter, and during the year meeting was established for the first time at Plainfield. Aaron Wood of the Laporte district tells of holding two quarterly meetings in barns, and three on camp-meeting grounds, where many thousands have attended. During the summer a camp-meeting was held near the “little modest town of Lebanon,” and a writer describes “this settlement” as having shared more largely in the great blessings of Methodism, than any other, which he has seen in the Wabash valley, “and its peculiar tendency to make men sober, industrious, kind and devotional, is here distinctly visible.” Meetings were also reported from the Independence, Centerville, Brownstown, Warsaw mission, Deep River mission, Evansville, Brookville, and from many other circuits and stations. Augustus Eddy from Indianapolis district reports more than 1,500 added to the Church since conference, “embracing all ranks and stations in society.”

“Revival power like a tidal wave was rolling over the country.”

These were years of rapid growth, in the number of members, circuits and districts. At the conference of 1840 eleven districts were formed, as follows: Madison, Charlestown, Indianapolis, Vincennes, Crawfordsville, Greencastle, Bloomington, Connersville, Winchester, Logansport and South Bend. The list of the presiding elders included Calvin W. Ruter, Enoch G. Wood, James Havens, Henry S. Talbott, Thomas J. Brown, Allen Wiley, John Miller, Augustus Eddy, Robert Burns, George M. Beswick and Aaron Wood. The number of circuits and stations in each district ranged from eight to eleven, and the whole state was now completely covered by these eleven Presiding Elders districts.63 The conference at its session in 1839 had asked the General Conference to make the northern boundary of state the northern boundary of the conference, and accordingly provision was made for the organization of the Michigan conference by the General Conference of 1840.

In the latter thirties Methodist work was begun among the Germans, who were beginning to come into the state in considerable numbers. The unsuccessful political revolutions in Europe during the year 1830 sent many disappointed Germans into the United States, and they kept coming into the central states in a continuous stream until the opening of the Civil War. In 1839 it was reported that four hundred had been converted and joined the Methodist Church, in various places in the country, and in 1840 the first German mission was established in Indiana, at Lawrenceburg, and John Kisling and M. J. Bofer were appointed missionaries. The German work prospered and the next year three German missions were reported, one at New Albany, one at Fort Wayne, beside the Lawrenceburg mission. The next two years the New Albany and Fort Wayne mission disappear, but new German work is begun at Evansville.64

Seventy-five years ago there was much less harmony among the denominations, and far more rivalry and jealousy than now, and debates between the champions of the various rival churches were common. Not only were there arguments and debates between the preachers, but the people were well versed in the peculiar doctrinal position of their particular denomination, and embraced every opportunity of defending it. The Methodists had strenuous debates with the "Campbellites," the Presbyterians, and the Baptists, but all the denominations united against the Universalist. In the forties there were several large debates held in the old court house at Martinsville between the Universalist leader of the West, Rev. Erasmus Manford, and James Scott, a Methodist preacher. Manford declared that all mankind would finally reach holiness and happiness, while Scott affirmed the endless punishment of the unrepentant wicked. At the close of the three days' debate Manford painted a hell for Scott and his brethren to look at, * * * then flung into it all the human race that orthodoxy excluded from Heaven. * * * Scott retaliated by sending Judas to Heaven before his Lord, and by carrying all liars and lechers, seducers and murderers, to Abraham's bosom," all bedeviled and unrepentant as they were." Manford replied that Mr. Scott need not worry himself about heavenly society, for all would be purified by the offering of Christ.

The debate was followed up by the Methodists with a revival, at which many seekers sought pardon at the altar, and at its conclusion a long list of probationers was turned over to the class leaders. At the end of the probationary period, however, the list had shrunk, "for the temptations to former habits and amusements which were forbidden in the Discipline were too great for their self-denial. * * * They had most willfully listened to the enchanting music of the violin, which was not at all commendable; for in those days, it was thought by many that more devils lurked in catgut and horsehair than Luther ever dreamed of. The Baptists, Presbyterians and Christians were all in accord with the Methodists in denouncing "fiddling and dancing and gumsucking parties."64

The tenth session of the Indiana conference met at Terre Haute, October 6, 1841, and was presided over by Bishop Roberts. This was the last time the venerable Bishop, now the senior Bishop of the Church, was to preside over an Indiana conference. For over twenty years Bishop Roberts had been a resident of Indiana, having moved to Lawrence county, Indiana, from Shenango, Pennsylvania, in 1819. He had been elected to the episcopacy by the General Conference of 1816, the very year of Asbury's death, and was the first married bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bishop Roberts being the first married bishop, the General Conference which elected him, passed a resolution, making it the duty of the Book Committee at New York, to decide what sum was to go to married Bishops for family expenses. This was done until 1832 when the rule was so changed as to make it the duty of the annual conference in which a Bishop resided, to estimate the "table expenses." Thus at each of its sessions since 1832 the Indiana conference had appointed a committee to estimate the "table expenses" of Bishop Roberts. From 1816 to 1832 Bishop Roberts had received the sum of $200 living expenses; from 1832 to 1836 he received $250; from 1836 to 1840, $300; and from 1840 to his death in 1843, the annual sum received was $400. Besides this the Bishop received a quarterage $200 yearly, which was contributed by all the Conferences.65

During these years of residence in Indiana, Bishop Roberts had greatly endeared himself to the Methodists of the state, and as old age approached the Indiana Conference became solicitous for his comfort, and at the session of the conference in 1839 resolutions were offered by C. W. Ruter, and Allen Wiley, which were unanimously passed, requesting Bishop Roberts to remove to some more prominent place in the state, where his brethren and friends could more easily have access to him, and thus render him such attention, as the Church felt anxious that he should receive. Bishop Roberts, however, refused to leave his farm in Lawrence county, and form new neighborhood alliances.

Again at the session of the conference at Terre Haute, in 1841, a Resolution was offered and passed requesting “That our venerable and beloved Superintendent, Bishop Roberts, be, and is hereby requested, at his first convenient opportunity, to sit for his portrait, and that the preachers of this conference be permitted to defray the expense which may accrue in obtaining such portrait.” When this resolution was passed Bishop Roberts related the following anecdote of Bishop Asbury. When the Philadelphia conference offered a similar resolution, in view of getting Bishop Asbury’s portrait, he told them, if they ever got his portrait they would have to go to “Paradise” for it. The brethren thought the Bishop altogether unreasonable, and insisted that it was a duty he owed the Church and posterity, to sit for his portrait. “Well,” said Bishop Asbury, with an indifferent air, “all I have to say is if you ever get my portrait, you will have to go to ‘Paradise’ to get it. He is the best artist I know of in America.” Mr. Paradise resided in New York, and of course the portrait was taken.

Bishop Roberts, probably, would have taken no step to have his portrait painted had it not been for a letter addressed to him by Dr. Matthew Simpson and E. R. Ames, urging him to come to Greencastle in July, 1842, 66 Ibid., 336. Minutes for 1839.

to sit for his portrait. Accordingly everything was arranged and the Bishop spent two weeks in Greencastle, and during his stay his portrait was painted, and Dr. Simpson wrote down, from the Bishop's own mouth, a brief outline of his early life, intending to write the life of the Bishop, but these notes were afterwards used by the Bishop's biographer, Dr. Charles Elliott. 69 The portrait then painted was a life-sized picture, and for many years hung in the old chapel of Indiana Asbury University, but in the fire which partially consumed that building, in 1878, the picture was cut out of the frame and is now hanging in the east gallery of Meharry Hall of DePauw University.

The conference of 1842 was held in Centerville, presided over by Bishop Morris. The conference was still growing rapidly and an increase of 9,562 members was reported, twenty-seven preachers were admitted on trial, and when the appointments were read 180 preachers were appointed to charges. Among the interesting occurrences of this conference was a sermon by J. B.
Finley, of the Ohio conference. He was known as the "old chief" and was unsparing in his denunciations of gold watches, jewelry and all clerical foppery, and the preachers' wives, who sported jewelry, where much incensed at his denunciations. 70 The sermon of this old warrior, before the Indiana conference on this occasion made a powerful impression. The Church was a new one and was packed to the doors, and down in front sat
James Havens, then known as "Father Havens." Finley told of his experiences as a missionary among the Wyandotte Indians, and his accounts of remarkable conversions and triumphant deaths among them were thrilling beyond comparison. Among other things he told of his first attempt to preach, when he tried to read one of his father's sermons, his father being a

Presbyterian minister, but the sermon was not a success. Then he said, "I dropped on my knees and called upon God to help me, and help me now." And his stammering tongue was loosed, and he shouted and exhorted, and prayed, and that first sermon resulted in the conversion of one person. "He was a stripling, an awkward, green boy. He came to Indiana: God called him to preach; he is now a son of thunder. He was not afraid of Indians. Scalping knives and tomahawks did not frighten him. He blazed his way through the woods of Indiana. He became familiar with the growl of the bear and the scream of the panther. He is now a veteran leader among you: he is here tonight—there he sits!" pointing to James Havens. The scene which followed beggars description. Havens sprang from the altar to the pulpit, to embrace the "old chief" in his arms, and the people shouted and screamed. 71

The last session of the old Indiana conference convened in the Old School Presbyterian Church in Crawfordsville, on October 18, 1843, Bishop James O. Andrew, presiding. It was the conference at which General Conference delegates were to be selected, and a deep current of anti-slavery sentiment was manifest among the preachers. Since the General Conference of 1840, anti-slavery sentiment had greatly increased in the Church at the North. Only eight years before in the General Conference of 1836, which met in Cincinnati, a resolution was introduced and passed by an overwhelming vote, condemning "Modern abolitionism, and wholly disclaiming any right, wish or intention to interfere in the civil and political relation between master and slave as it exists in the slave-holding states of the Union." The Bishops in their pastoral letters the same year exhort all "to abstain from all abolition movements and associations and to refrain from patronizing any of their publications." Between 1836

and 1840 a number of preachers were brought to trial before their respective conferences because of their abolitionism, and the Philadelphia conference for ten years after 1837, asked each candidate for admission into the conference, "Are you an abolitionist?" and unless this question was answered in the negative he was not received. The incident which was the direct cause for the increase of anti-slavery sentiment in the Church, was the action of a Maryland pro-slavery convention which met in the winter of 1841-1842. This convention passed resolutions asking the Maryland Legislature to pass a law which would result in either driving the free negroes from the state or reducing them to bondage. This action greatly aroused the Methodists all over the North, because many of the free negroes were Methodists.\(^7^2\)

This convention was discussed in all the Church papers, and the notice of the convention in the Christian Advocate and Journal of New York, created such alarm at the South, that predictions were made, if it continued to take part in the slavery discussion the paper would not circulate in the South.\(^7^3\)

The delegates elected by the Indiana conference of 1843 to the General Conference of 1844, were Matthew Simpson, A. Wiley, E. R. Ames, John Miller, C. W. Ruter, Aaron Wood, Augustus Eddy and James Havens with John C. Smith and Richard Hargrave as reserve delegates. Two of these men elected as General Conference delegates were afterwards to become bishops, Matthew Simpson and E. R. Ames, both elected on the same ballot by the General Conference of 1852, and both became conspicuous leaders of the Church and the nation during the critical period of the Civil War.

The most important question before this last session of the old Indiana conference was the one relating to the division of the conference. The conference was fast becoming unwieldy, each year there having been large increase in the membership; and the whole state was now dotted with circuits and stations. At the close of this session there were 16 districts, 148 circuits and stations, and over 200 ministers. The conference of 1842 had taken action on the matter of division and resolutions, favoring it had been passed. After considerable discussion a number of resolutions respecting division were adopted. The boundary between the conferences was to be the National road, with the provision that the Eastern charge in Indianapolis, now Roberts Park Church, with all the towns on the road east, were to be placed in the Northern Conference, while the Western charge, now Meridian Street Church, with all the towns west on the National road, were to be placed in the Southern Conference, except Terre Haute, which was placed in the Northern Conference. The conference also provided that the Southern conference was to be known as the Indiana conference, and the Northern division of the North Indiana Conference.

\(^7^2\) Sweet, Methodist Episcopal Church and the Civil War. 20-24.
\(^7^3\) Charles Elliott, The Great Secession. 237, 238.

Bishop Roberts had died March 26, 1843, and it was fitting that the old Indiana conference at its last session should take appropriate notice of his death. Early in the session a committee consisting of C. W. Ruter, Matthew Simpson and Allen Wiley was appointed to draft appropriate resolutions, and later in the session they reported in a series of nine resolutions. Among the resolutions were several resolving that the remains of Bishop Roberts, which had been buried on his farm, should be removed to Greencastle; and that a suitable monument should be erected over the body, to be paid for by the Indiana conference; and that Bishop Soule should be requested to furnish the epitaph for the tomb. These resolutions were afterwards carried out to the letter, and in 1844 the remains of Bishop Roberts were removed to the campus of Indiana Asbury University, at Greencastle, and later a suitable monument was erected over the spot, upon which was engraved the inscription furnished by Bishop Soule, where it can be seen to this day.

The General Conference of 1844, which met in New York, divided the Indiana Conference into the Northern and Southern divisions, as the conference itself had asked, and with this division, we bring this account to a close.
PART II.

The committee appointed on Bible, Sabbath School and Tract Societies, reported as follows: "The committee to whom was committed the report of the General Conference on the subject of Bible, Sunday Schools and Tract Societies, have had the same under consideration, and have to lament that our success in promoting said societies has not been commensurate with our capability of acting, and the means which divine Providence has put within our power. We hope, however, in the future, that we shall redeem in some measure, the time and means which are lost, by an increased endeavor to do our duty in time to come. In order to which, we recommend that this Conference require each preacher in charge of a Circuit or Station, in conjunction with his Presiding Elder to use his influence to form the Quarterly Conference of his Circuit or Station into a Bible Sunday School and Tract Society, auxiliary to these several societies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and also to form as many subordinate or branch societies in his Circuit as in his power."
We would also recommend that the Junior Preachers aid so far as they can in this good work.

We would recommend that if any preacher neglects his duty in this matter he be censured by the Conference as a man unfaithful to his trust as a Methodist preacher.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Bishop Roberts elected Bishop at this conference, being the first married Bishop. This was done until 1836 when the rule was so changed as to make it the duty of the annual conference in which a bishop resides to estimate the amount of necessary expenses. Ames having been previously examined by the committee appointed for that purpose were called forward and examined before the Conference by Bishop Soule as the Discipline directs; afterward their characters were severally examined, and all admitted into full connection and elected to Deacons' Orders, except Brothers Sparks and Ellsbury, who were previously ordained when local preachers.

Who are the superannuated preachers and widows and orphans of preachers, having claims on the Conference and the sum to which each one is entitled? 2nd. What preachers and on what circuits are deficient of their allowance, and the amount of each one’s deficiency. 3d. What has been collected on the circuits and stations—naming, also, those, if any such there be, for which nothing shall have been received or contributed by benevolent Societies or individuals, or drawn from the Book Concern and Chartered fund to meet their claims.

Saturday, half-past eight o’clock a. m. Conference met pursuant to adjournment and was opened according to rule. The list was called and Journals read and approved. Conference proceeded to business, Bishop Soule in the chair. Conference resumed the consideration of the case of local preachers recommended for Deacon’s Orders. John Evans and Amasa Johnson were recommended from Indianapolis District and elected.

Conference then proceeded to the consideration of the Local Deacons as recommended for Elder’s Orders. Joseph Barrett was recommended from Indianapolis District, was elected. The committee appointed on the subject of the Conference Seminary presented their report, which was read and adopted.

The report: “Next to the religion of the Son of God your committee consider the light of science calculated to lessen the sum of human woe and to increase the sum of human happiness. Therefore we are of the opinion that the means of education ought to be placed within the reach of every community in general, so that all may have an opportunity of obtaining an ordinary and necessary education. From observation and information your committee are well convinced that where superior schools and colleges are neglected, ordinary schools are almost universally in a languished state. And many persons are reared, and live and die without any education. We therefore think that Seminaries and Colleges under good literary and moral regulations are of incalculable benefit to our country, and that a good Conference Seminary would be of great and growing utility to our people. We are aware that when a Conference Seminary is named, some of our preachers and many of our people suppose we are about to establish a manufactory in which preachers are to be made. But nothing is farther from our views, for we are fully of Mr. Bernge's opinion who, when comparing ministers to pens, observes 'that although the Seminaries have been trying to make pens for some hundreds of years, they will not write well till God nibs them.'"

When we examine the state of the literary institutions of our country we find a majority of them are in the hands of other denominations (whether rightfully or otherwise, we do not take it upon ourselves to determine) whose doctrine in many respects we consider incompatible with the doctrines of revelation, so that our people are unwilling (and we think properly so) to send their sons to those institutions. Therefore we think it very desirable to have an institution under our own control from which we can exclude all doctrines which we deem dangerous; though at the same time we do not wish to make it so sectarian as to exclude or in the smallest degree repel the sons of our fellow citizens from the same.

To accomplish the foregoing desirable objects we most earnestly recommend the Conference the use of the means that will lead to the end. We would advise that the Presiding Elders of the several districts be required to collect all the information in their power in reference to an eligible site, and the means to build, and present the same to the next Conference. All of which is respectfully submitted.

The Methodist objections to the State college as it then existed were: (1) The institution was regarded as belonging to the Presbyterian church. It was listed in the catalogue of Presbyterian colleges. (2) The religious beliefs of Methodist students were not respected. (3) Efforts were made to convince the public that none but Presbyterians were competent to teach in higher institutions of learning, and (4) under the existing system no Methodist could be represented on the board of trustees, although the Methodists were the most numerous religious sect in the State. (F. C. Holloway “Life and Times of Allen Wiley,” pp. 71-72.) Seven petitions were presented to the Indiana Legislature in 1834, asking for “a reform in the economy of Indiana college.” (House Journal, 1834, pp. 82, 148, 155, 228, 236, 293, 368.)

The committee appointed to draft a memorial in behalf of this conference to the Legislature of this state relative to (the) State College at Bloomington, presented their report, which was read, and on motion, was adopted; which report read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Indiana. Your memorialists represent to your honorable body, that they in common with their fellow citizens, recognize in the munificent grant of lands by the general government to our state (for the purpose of endowing a state institution of learning) a corresponding obligation on our part so to manage it as not to defeat the charitable bequest of our common country. We feel that cause of complaint exists in regard to this matter, yet we do not approach your honorable body as irritated and injured individuals asking for the redress of private wrongs, but as patrons and advocates of general science, pleading her cause and imploring you in your paternal character to open her prison doors. We would impress it upon your honorable body that the Literature belongs to no one denomination of persons, and that no one exclusively should be allowed to possess the keys that unlock her treasures. We apprehend that the funds of our state college were designed by their munificent donors to patronize science and advocate the cause of general literature and not of religious sects, and should it be divested from its original design (directly or indirectly) the donors are despoiled of a rich inheritance, and the legacy itself betrayed to a very questionable purpose. We feel a deep and abiding interest in the success of the institution, we recognize in the provision of its constitution, (and particularly 10th section) the generous confiding spirit in which its powers and functions were bestowed, as it were, in the absence of every uncharitable feeling or suspicion, that the hydra of sectarianism might erect its standard there, yet we in common with our fellow men of the state have to regret that our hopes in it have been disappointed. We look in its charter and read that the places of president, professors and tutors are open, soliciting capacity to occupy them without regard to religious professions or doctrines. We then turn our eyes on the faculty from the organization of the institution up to this hour, and we see one common hue, one common religion characterize every member, as if capacity and fitness were confined to one church and one set of religious opinions. We have heretofore borne this without complaint and would now be silent, had we no higher object than to contend for the places and honors of the institution. But when we see the youth of our own and other churches voluntarily abandoning and renouncing the institution because the religion of their fathers (is but tolerated) and not domiciled: then we feel impelled by every consideration that looks to the future, and speak out, and invoke you to reclaim for the state, the power bestowed upon the Board of Trustees of filling their own vacancies, and give to them a fixed and definite term of office in future. This wholesome restraint would, it is firmly believed, bring to the service of the institution a due proportion from other religious denominations, and breathe into it a new spirit, full of life and vigor. Your memorialists, therefore, earnestly solicit your interference in this matter, and that you may, in the premises do what is best for the good of science, is the earnest prayer of your memorialists.”

The committee appointed to draft a petition suitable for the signatures of the citizens of this state, and send to the General Assembly, relative to the Bloomington College presented their report, which was read and adopted. On motion, J. A. Brouse, William
M. Daily, B. Phelps, H. S. Talbott and J. S. Harrison were appointed a committee to furnish each preacher belonging to this conference with a copy of the same. Whereupon conference adjourned.

2 It might be interesting here to note that the sentiment of the Methodist church, while opposed to slavery as a moral wrong, was nevertheless strongly against abolition. Peter Cartwright, in his Autobiography, has the following to say about the church's attitude toward the slavery question: "Prior to the General Conference of 1836 the run-mad spirit of rabid abolitionism had broken out in some of the Eastern and Northern Conferences, and Methodist preachers were found by the dozen to quit their appropriate fields of labor, and their holy calling of saving souls.
pointed Rodman Lewis, Smith L. Robinson and John C. Smith said committee. The stewards of conference presented their report which was read and adopted and a balance being on hand was, on motion, voted by the conference to be paid over to Daniel Anderson. The committee on books and periodicals presented their report, which was read and adopted. C. W. Ruter, who was two years since appointed a committee to adjust the papers of our deceased Bro. Strange, and if practicable collect any money that may be due to his estate, presented a verbal report, stated that he had not been able to collect any money and return the papers to the conference, and on motion, they were returned to the widow of Brother Strange by the hand of Brother Tarkington. The agent, C. W. Ruter, who was elected last year to receive the bequest of James Paxton, deceased, presented his report, which was adopted and his agency continued. Conference adjourned.

Wednesday, 8:30 o’clock a. m., conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened according to rule, and conference proceeded to business, Bishop Roberts in the chair. On motion, it was resolved that a committee of one be appointed whose duty it should be to have the memorial presented by this conference to the Legislature, last year, on the subject of the Bloomington College, published in some public journal, and turn out and become hired lecturers against slavery. . . .

Dr. Fisk was a good man and true, and was as much opposed to slavery as any of them, yet he was for occupying real Methodist preacher ground, and bearing his plain, honest testimony against the moral evil of slavery, and not meddling with it politically only in a constitutional way” (p. 363.)

In the General Conference of 1836 which met in Cincinnati, a resolution was passed condemning “Modern abolitionism, and wholly disclaiming any right, wish or intention to interfere in the civil and political relations between master and slave as it exists in the slave holding States of the Union.” (Sweet, Methodist Episcopal Church and the Civil War, p. 20.)
in this state, with such remarks as he may think proper. C. W. Ruter was nominated and elected that committee. The Bishop then appointed a committee to examine the graduates at the next conference. Allen Wiley and William Shanks were appointed to examine on theology and church government; Aaron Wood on church history and geography; E. R. Ames on grammar, history, philosophy and logic, and C. W. Ruter on the books prescribed in the course of study. On motion, resolved that an agent be appointed to attend to and promote the interests of the Preacher's Aid Society of the Indiana Annual Conference. The mission committee presented their report, which after being read, was adopted. The following resolution was laid before the conference: Resolved by the Indiana annual conference that the ensuing General Conference be requested to restore to our discipline Mr. Wesley's original rule on the subject of "Ardent Spirits" a rising vote being called, 43 members present, all voted in the affirmative—said resolution was adopted. The

3 This rule, which stated that "drunkenness, buying or selling of spirituous liquors, or drinking them, unless in cases of extreme necessity," should be avoided, had early been abandoned by the Methodist church in America. Under the ruling at this time only ministers were forbidden the buying and selling of liquors, members being permitted its sale, providing they permitted no disorderly conduct on their premises. (Western Christian Advocate, September 18, 1835. Editorial on a similar resolution passed by the Ohio Conference.)

Peter Cartwright in his account of his trip to the General Conference of 1824 at Baltimore, in the company of Jesse Walker, Samuel Thompson and a certain F. S., states that at every stop F. S. and Walker called for spirits. Cartwright and Thompson protested, whereupon the other two preachers defended the practice. Cartwright and Thompson then threatened to quit their company if they continued this practice, and in this way they were persuaded to stop using liquors for this time at least. This incident well illustrates the attitude of most Methodist people toward the use of liquors at this time. (Peter Cartwright's Autobiography. pp. 213-214.)
committee on education presented their report which was read and recommitted with instructions to report in the afternoon session. The committee on abolition presented their report, which was read, and on motion, adopted. Conference adjourned.

Wednesday, 2 o'clock p. m., conference met pursuant to adjournment and was opened according to rule, Bishop Roberts in the chair; conference proceeded to business. On motion, Brother Wiley was directed to pay to the treasurer of the Preacher's Aid Society the amount of the bequest of Swearingin, by him collected. The committee on education presented their report, embracing a plan for raising funds and establishing a college which was read and, on motion, adopted. The report read as follows:

Your committee on the subject of education have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report that in their opinion the interest of the rising generation are deeply involved in the cause that shall be taken by this conference and that in view of the vast and increasing numbers within the bounds of the Indiana annual conference who are under the influence of Methodism and are looking to this branch of the church to give direction to the minds of the youth on the subject of education and in view of the relation in which we stand to the church and community as a body of ministers; it becomes our imperious duty to make a united and persevering effort to establish a system of education which shall meet the wishes or wants of the people who look to us to take the lead in this important undertaking. We therefore recommend to the conference the following plan for the raising of funds and establishing a college or university which shall be called the Indiana Asbury University of the Indiana annual conference:

First. Let a stock be created to consist of an indefinite number of shares of one hundred dollars each, payable in money, to be put at interest or in notes bearing interest payable in five annual installments, and the interest to be paid annually at the time of paying each instalment; provided that whenever a stockholder shall commence sending a student he shall have paid at least one instalment.

Second. Each stockholder shall be entitled in virtue of his share, to send one student to the college six years or twelve sessions, subject to all the regulations of the by-laws and if any one shall have more shares than one he shall be entitled to the privilege of sending more students than one according to his shares.

Third. Any person who may desire it shall have the privilege of subscribing a half share or fifty dollars, and shall do it on the same terms of payment as those who take whole shares. And any person having a half stock may send one student for three years or six sessions.

Fourth. Let ten thousand dollars be the endowment of a professorship.

Fifth. Let two hundred and fifty dollars be the price of a scholarship for a term of 20 years.

Sixth. Let donations of five dollars and upwards be obtained towards endowing a professorship and let those donations be received in money or notes bearing interest and payable in annual instalments of $5.00 and the interest payable annually.

Seventh. Let there be established a dollar subscription payable within the current year in money towards endowing the professorship above mentioned.

Eighth. Let all the intinerant preachers and especially Presiding Elders act with energy as agents and in addition to this let a special agent be appointed to travel within the bounds of this conference and solicit donations for carrying into full effect the foregoing arrangements and if practicable another agent to travel elsewhere for the same purpose.

Ninth. Petition the Legislature for an act of incorporation fixing the number of trustees and so forth and for an endowment for one or more professorships.

Tenth. Let there be a subscription paper circulated in two or more prominent towns by way of competition to ascertain in what place the greatest amount for erecting suitable buildings be given by the people on condition of its location among them or in their vicinity.

Eleventh. At a convenient time send an agent into the eastern cities to obtain by donation books for a library, etc. All of which is respectfully submitted.

On motion, resolved that the secretary furnish each Presiding Elder with an abstract of the report and on motion the conference proceeded to elect the several committees to act in the principal towns in this state to carry into effect the object contemplated in the tenth article. Rev. James Haven, John Wilkins and Calvin Fletcher at Indianapolis. Rev. A. Wiley, Hon. William Hendricks and John Woodburn in Madison. Rev. Aaron Wood, John Jackson, and Elisha U. Brown at Terre Haute were elected. On motion, resolved that a vote of thanks be given to the citizens of Lafayette for their kind hospitality to the members of this conference during its present session. On motion, resolved that a vote of thanks be given to the members of the Presbyterian Church for the use of their house during the session of this conference. Resolved that this conference instruct its delegates to the next General Conference to consent that the northern boundaries of this state shall be the bounds of this conference. On motion, resolved that Rev. A. Wiley pay over to the treasurer of the Preachers' Aid Society the amount of money left in his hands by the last conference being the bequest of Swearinger. On motion, the appointments were read out and conference adjourned.

Resolved, 3rd, That we deem it inexpedient at this time to send an agent out of our state to solicit funds for our university.

"2 At the last annual Conference I was appointed one of the agents for the Indiana Asbury University. I commenced my work as an agent in Indianapolis when I spent two or three weeks during the session of the Legislature and did something very handsome among the members. My next point was Spencer, a little town of about 400 population and here I obtained subscriptions to the amount of $600. From here I proceeded to Rockville and from there to Crawfordsville and on to Terre Haute. From thence I came to Vincennes. To the astonishment of all I procured in this place funds to the amount of $1,020. My next place was Washington, a little place of about 500 population. From common fame I thought it rather a gloomy outlook for an agent, but to their honor I procured notes to the amount of $700. I am now on my way to Carlisle, March 1, 1838. Yours,"

WILLIAM M. DAILY.

Farrow, William Crumptom, James Nosler and John Wilkins be appointed to fill the places of Robert R. Roberts, S. E. Leonard, Jacob Hays and Martin M. Ray, whose seats have been declared vacant.

4 The spread of intelligence brought about a movement to reform manners. Attention was especially directed to the misuse of spirituous liquors. Total abstinence societies began to be formed about the year 1824 and in five years more than a thousand had been organized. Zealous preachers of temperance went into every part of the country with the result that many people were enlisted into the movement. In 1830 temperance organizations began to be known as Washington Societies. By 1840 the movement began to work for the prohibition of the sale and manufacture of spirituous liquors. 1 On that day Dr. Simpson, the young president of Asbury University, made his first appearance in the Indiana Conference. "His personal appearance was a perpetual disappointment. He was too youthful to meet expectation, being less than thirty years old, and his dress was of jeans, neat and well-fitting; but not what most expected of so distinguished a man. His praise as a preacher was in all the land, and every one desired to hear him. This opportunity came in his sermon on the itinerary of Methodism. It was a very powerful one and dealt largely with the then much discussed question of the millennium. Such was the force and eloquence of the young man, that many were overcome with emotion and he was 'at once voted the prince of pulpit orators.'" Autobiography of Joseph Tarkington, pp. 17-20.

⁴This society was formed in the year 1816, in the city of Washington and very soon there were auxiliary branches formed in most of the states. "In its original formation and subsequent progress, in its avowals, arguments and acts, it was always singularly inconsistent and illogical. It manifestly yielded and parted to the wicked prejudice against race and color, and yet it called upon churches and Christians to assist in sustaining it as an essential part of the missionary enterprise." In reality its purpose was supposed to be that of taking the free negroes to Africa and there giving them a chance to govern themselves. (Wilson, "Rise and Fall of the Slave Power in America," 208.)

Tuesday, at half past eight o'clock a.m., conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened by Rev. A. Wiley by reading of Scripture, singing and prayer. The list was called, the journals read and approved, and conference proceeded with business, Bishop Soule in the chair. The secretary presented the book which he was directed to purchase for the records of the conference, which was received and paid for by the members of the conference. Brother George Havens, through his presiding elder, asked and received a location. Brother John A. Brouse, through his presiding elder, asked to have his relation changed from effective to superannuated, and his request was granted. The stewards then made their report, showing the total amount of claims of the members of the conference to be $30,645.20. Amounts received $21,818.38, leaving a deficit of $8,826.82. To meet which they have from fifth collections $173.81, from book concern $600.00, from chartered fund $73.00, from conference collection $39.40, which enabled the stewards to declare a dividend of 44 3/4% on deficits. The report was adopted.

2 The fifth collection was so called to distinguish it from the regular four quarterly collections taken to support the active ministry. The fund went to the superannuated ministry. (See Western Christian Advocate, July 19, 1844, p. 55.)

and the funds distributed to the claimants. There being a surplus of $4.40 and a gold watch seal, the stewards were directed to present the same to Brother Vredenburgh. The stewards also report $1.32, which came into their hands after the formation of the report, which sum was voted into the hands of Brother J. Myers. The numbers in society were then taken and it was found that there has been an increase of 7,116 members during the past year. Conference then resumed the consideration of the first question on the minutes, viz: Who are admitted on trial? Whereupon John Kisling, recommended from the Madison district, was admitted. Martin J. Hofer, recommended from Madison district, was admitted. Eli C. Jones, recommended from Vincennes district, was admitted. On motion, the presiding elders in whose districts Wm. D. Cox and Manlove Reid may reside, shall have leave to employ them if expedient. Resolved, that it shall be the duty of those preachers in whose bounds superannuated preachers or widows, or orphans of preachers may reside to make special inquiry, concerning their circumstances, and, if orphans, whether they are receiving a proper education? And report the same to the next conference. A communication signed by H. P. DeBruler, complaining that injustice had been done him by the quarterly conference of the Princeton circuit, was received. The communication was, on motion, referred to a committee of three, who shall have power to examine persons and papers, and report to this conference before the close of this session. Samuel C. Cooper, Enoch G. Wood and R. S. Robinson were appointed that committee. On motion, conference adjourned.

Wednesday, at half past eight o'clock a. m., conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was opened by Rev. Samuel C. Cooper by reading a portion of the Scripture, singing and prayer. The list was called, the journals read and approved, and the conference proceeded to business, Bishop Soule in the chair. The mission committee presented their report showing an appropriation for the support of missions, within the bounds of the conference, amounting to $905.00 for the current year. The report was concurred in by Bishop Soule. The book committee presented their report, which was adopted. The committee to whom was referred the case of Brother DeBruler report that in their opinion the said DeBruler had no right to appeal to this body. The report was adopted. The financial committee reports the following resolution: "Resolved, that the principle laid down in the report of the financial committee of last year is the only one which can prove just and give general satisfaction." The report was adopted. The stewards reported that they were authorized to draw on the Preachers Aid Society of the Indiana annual conference for $409.69, which was distributed as follows:

To H. Vredenburgh......$100.00
To R. Hargrave ________ 40.00
To J. Richie ____________ 50.00
To Miles Haffaker _______ 29.69
To Wm. H. Smith_________ 100.00
To C. Bonner ____________ 40.00
To J. L. Thompson_______ 50.00

The above report was adopted. The committee to estimate the table expenses of Bishop Roberts reported the sum of $400.00, which was adopted. The committee appointed at the last conference to have the moneys and donations for centenary purposes recorded in a proper book, reported that they have attended to the business assigned them, which book cost $4.38. J. Soule presented his account for recording the names of the donors, and it was resolved that he be paid out of moneys which may have been or shall be collected for centenary purposes. The first annual report of the joint Board of Trustees and Visitors of the Indiana Asbury University was presented and accepted, and ordered to be printed in the Western Christian Advocate. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted: Whereas, Divine Providence has greatly prospered the Indiana annual conference, in her endeavors to establish a valuable institution of learning, and, whereas, said institution is greatly in need of a valuable library, chemical and philosophical apparatus, commensurate with her high destiny, and, whereas, it will need $20,000 to procure such library and apparatus, and whereas, Bishop Soule expects to visit Europe in 1842, and he would be a suitable agent to aid in the purchasing of such part thereof as it will be necessary to purchase in Europe, therefore, be it resolved, that relying on Divine Providence, we mutually pledge ourselves to use our best endeavors to raise the said sum of $20,000 before Bishop Soule sails for Europe. (Signed) Allen Wiley, C. W. Ruter. Resolved, that each preacher in the Indiana conference be requested to exert his influence to procure annually one or more suitable students for the Asbury University. (Signed) S. C. Cooper, Allen Wiley. Resolved, that the twenty-fifth day of December next, be set apart to be observed as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Almighty God for the mercies of the past year, especially for the unexampled increase in the membership of the church, and that we will recommend all our people to make on that occasion a missionary thank-offering. A. Eddy, W. W. Hibben. The committee, to whom was referred the peculiar situation of Brother Stiver, reports that it is inexpedient for this conference to give any advice in the case, in which report the conference concur. The agent for the university reported, that since the 25th day of September, 1839, he has added to the funds of the institution $6,702.25, and that the whole amount of cash and property passed through his hands since the same date is $18,696.40. On motion, conference adjourned, to meet again at two o’clock p. m. N. B. The following resolution passed in the forenoon was omitted: Resolved, that each preacher be required as early as convenient in the ensuing year to furnish his presiding elder with a list of all the postoffices in the bounds of his work, and that each presiding elder furnish the book agents at New York with said list. William V. Daniel, S. T. Gillett.

Two o’clock p. m., conference met pursuant to adjournment and was opened in the usual manner by Rev. E. G. Wood, Bishop Soule in the chair. A communication was received from the Indianapolis Branch Bible Society in relation to the claims of the Bible cause and the necessity of patronizing it. On motion, resolved, that we approve of the resolution presented by the Bible Society of Indianapolis, and that we will carry it into effect as far as our peculiar economy will permit.

On motion, conference proceeded to elect nine visitors to the Indiana Asbury University, for the present year, and a committee of the three was appointed to retire to another room and count the votes, it was ascertained that A. Wiley received seventy-three votes, W. H. Goode sixty-nine, A. Eddy sixty-six, C. W. Ruter sixty-four, E. R. Ames fifty-five, S. C. Cooper forty-seven and A. Wood thirty-five, J. L. Belotte thirty-four, J. C. Smith thirty and these brethren were announced by the president as being duly elected. Conference then proceeded to fix by ballot, the place of the next annual session, and Terre Haute was chosen as the place, and the time appointed by the Bishop, is October 20, 1841. On motion, resolved, that a vote of thanks be tendered to the citizens of Indianapolis for their kind hospitality shown toward the preachers during their present session, and that it be announced in the public congregation by the preacher who may fill the pulpit in this charge on next Sabbath. Resolved, that a vote of thanks be tendered by this conference to the several pastors and congregations who have kindly tendered their respective churches for the occupancy of the ministers of this body. Resolved, that the examination at the close of the first year of such as have one year on trial be dispensed with and that the granduates be examined on the full course, recommended at the close of the second year. For the purpose of infusing more energy and producing greater unanimity of action in our benevolent and literary enterprises: It is ordered by the Indiana annual conference that two general annual collections be made in all our congregations. The first to be made during the months of December, January and February for the support of missions. The second to be made during the months of April, May and June, for the aid of our university. The fund to be applied under the direction of the conference, to the purchase of a library, chemical and philosophical apparatus. It is also directed by the conference that each presiding elder preach a special sermon on each of these subjects annually in each station, and circuit in his district, and that he also see that each preacher make collections as above specified. It is recommended to the preachers as the best method of collecting funds, not to depend on public collections alone, but in their pastoral visits to bring the subject before the members and friends of the church, individually. That by this means the entire strength of the church may be concentrated upon the great object we desire to accomplish, viz: the religious and intellectual improvement of the whole community. Resolved, that the book containing the record of donations to the centenary fund be placed in the hands of President Simpson to be laid up in the archives of the Indiana Asbury University. Resolved, that the second Friday in January be observed as a day of fasting and prayer for the prosperity of Zion generally and especially for the revival of the work of God in the bounds of this conference. The bishop then proceeded to close the conference by an appropriate farewell address and by singing the hymn, commencing with the words: "And Let Our Bodies Part," and by prayer. The Bishop then read out the appointments for the ensuing year.

Daily, and therefore unanimously recommend that his character be passed without censure by this conference. James L. Thompson, President; J. Marsee, J. Jones, D. DeMott, William V. Daniel, Secretary. Which report was adopted, and his relation was changed from superannuated to effective.

The committee on Brother Belotte's case reported as follows: That after hearing the testimony of several brethren, they have no evidence to convince them that Brother Belotte has in any way wronged the interpreter employed by him.

As it regards some other matters, the committee find themselves in an embarrassing and painful condition. If there be no mistake in the understanding and memories of Brothers Cooper and Beswick, the committee is led to the conclusion that Brother Belotte did obtain an additional appropriation of missionary funds at the Indianapolis conference by false representations, in stating that he had paid the wages and expenses of the interpreter out of his own salary. All of which is respectfully submitted.

ALLEN WILEY,
Chairman Committee.

Centerville, October 22nd, 1842.

The committee to whom was referred the selecting of a Life Director made their report, and Conference selected Brother Allen Wiley, and directed the Secretary to furnish him a certificate thereof.

On motion of Brother Ruter, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we commend to the people in our respective charges to observe Friday, the 22nd day of December next, as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer; and that we advise them in each society to commence on the evening of that day a four days' prayer meeting, and that such meetings be protracted when circumstances will justify their continuance.

Resolved, That we will endeavor to observe, and that we will recommend our people within the bounds of this conference to observe, Friday, the 26th day of April next, as a day of fasting and prayer, with special reference to the meeting of our ensuing General Conference, fervently praying the Head of the Church so to direct that body, in all their deliberations, that their minds may be to such conclusions as shall most tend to promote the glory of God and advance the interests of the Redeemer's Kingdom upon earth.

Resolved, That during the ensuing Conference year we will endeavor on the evening of each day in the twilight hour, especially to remember our brethren of this Conference, at the throne of grace, praying each for the others, that all may be preserved from evil, that we may greatly increase in knowledge, in holiness and usefulness, and be made more than ever successful in spreading scriptural holiness over the lands.

On motion, Brothers J. A. Brouse and J. C. Harbin were placed in a superannuated relation.
On motion of Brother E. G. Wood: Resolved, That each preacher in charge be instructed to take up a collection in the month of March next for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the delegates to the next General Conference, and forward it to the nearest delegate.

On motion, the Secretary was directed to furnish a copy of the resolutions on Indianapolis church property to the preacher of the Western charge.

After some notices, Conference was closed, with the benediction by the Bishop.

Wednesday Afternoon, October 25th, 1843.

Conference met, pursuant to adjournment, in the Methodist Church, and the journals were read and approved.

On motion: Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference be hereby tendered to those religious denominations who have kindly opened their churches for our occupancy during the session of this Conference.

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference be hereby tendered to the citizens of Crawfordsville and vicinity, who have kindly opened their hearts and houses for our accommodation during the session of this Conference.

The Bishop announced A. Wiley, W. C. Larrabee and J. C. Smith as visitors to the Female Institute in Indianapolis.

On motion, Brother Bruing was placed in a superannuated relation. The Committee on the New York Book Concern made their report, which was accepted and filed away among the Conference papers.

Conference was then closed with singing and prayer by the Bishop. And the appointments were read.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Manuscripts.

Journal of the Western Conference (1800-1811) and Journal of the Ohio Conference (1812-1839), in two fairly well preserved manuscript volumes, in the possession of the Ohio Methodist Historical Society, in the library of Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio.

Journal of the Indiana Conference (1832-1844), a finely preserved manuscript volume, belonging to the North Indiana Conference, now in the library of DePauw University.

Considerable manuscript material, relating to local churches and circuits, has been available for this study, including the Quarterly Conference Records of the Fall Creek Circuit from 1828; the Quarterly Conference Records of the Crawfordsville station from 1835; manuscript material relating to the founding and history of DePauw University, in the office of the treasurer of the university; some of the records of the old Silver Creek Circuit, the first complete circuit in Indiana, found at the Charlestown Methodist Episcopal Church, the earliest record being dated February 23, 1810.

Much other material of this kind is also available, of more or less importance, every church possessing records, many of which, however, are meager and incomplete. An attempt has been made to collect this material, so that it can more easily be used, and a survey of the North Indiana Conference has been organized. This Conference appointed a Conference Historian in the person of Dr. H. N. Herrick, now deceased, and also county historians were appointed, who were to write up the history of every Methodist Church in the county. Among these county historians who have turned in material are Rev. C. H. Smith, for Hancock county; Mr. F. A. Walker, Esq., for Madison county; I. W. Krider, for Cass county; Rev. J. E. Ervin, for Delaware county; Captain M. B. Willis, for Dekalb county; Mrs. M. E. Kiblinger, for Noble county; Rev. H. J. Norris, for Randolph county; Mr. R. S. Truitt, for Hamilton county; Dr. J. M. Moulder, for Howard county; Rev. B. G. Shinn, for Blackford county; Rev. J. B. Cook, for Kosciusko county; Mr. W. E. Mowbray, Esq., for Miami county. The other county historians appointed for the remaining counties in the Conference are Rev. W. J. Myers, Adams county; O. E. Mohler, Allen county; Prof. D. W. Thomas, Elkhart county; Charles E. Neal, Esq., Grant county; Dr. J. W. White, Henry county; Dr. W. C. Chaffee, Huntington county; A. T. Place, Jay county; G. C. Morgan, Lagrange county; Rev. G. H. Hill, Marion county; Mrs. W. E. Butterworth, St. Joseph county; Mrs. Frank Wier, Steuben county; Mr. M. W. Pershing, Tipton county; Mrs. A. F. Ebbinghouse, Wabash county; Rev. O. S. Harrison, Wayne county; Prof. P. A. Allen, Wells county, and Rev. C. W. Shoemaker, Whitley county.

The Northwest Indiana Conference also passed resolutions looking toward the appointment of county historians by the district superintendents, but this survey, so far, has resulted in the investigation of but one county—Benton county—by Rev. J. E. McCloud.

Dr. Herrick before his death had compiled a complete appointment record for the North Indiana Conference, and had also put in rough form his first chapter for his intended History of the North Indiana Conference. Dr. Herrick's manuscript has been drawn upon in this study, and in some instances has given valuable assistance.
PERIODICALS AND CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

"The Western Christian Advocate," begun 1834. One of the most important sources for this study. Besides scattered items, a number of important serial articles, bearing on the early history of Indiana Methodism, have been found in the files of this paper, the most important of which are:

"Minutes of Conferences," Vols. I, II, III, 1773-1845. Bound volumes containing statistics of all the Conferences in the United States, among them being statistics for Indiana from the earliest introduction of Methodism within the State. Also contains brief biographies of deceased ministers.

"The General Conference Journals" contains proceedings of the General Conference, the lawmaking body of the Church, which met every four years. (1812-1844.)

"Disciplines" (1812-1844). Contains digest of Methodist law, Church rules, boundaries of conferences, etc. Revised every four years by the action of the General Conference.
